NEW YEAR MUSINGS.

BY DAISY CHESTER. The New Year has come and the Old Year has fle Gone to the realms of the past and the dead, With its burdens and sorrows, its hopes and its fears Its hours of joy and its bitter tears, And I muse to-night, on its gifts to me-Home, friends, and health, a blessed three.

The by-gone year was a kind, true friend, For it brought me contentment and hope to the end If its hours of mirth and revel were few Its pleasures were far more abiding and true, Their memory will gild when my years are told, The evening of life, with a sunset of gold.

But I often turn from the scenes that are o'er To dream of the future that lieth before, And I eagerly strive, with outstretched hand, To lift the veil from that mystic land; But all in vain, for I cannot see What the coming months are bringing to me.

Will the days glide by, like a summer stream, Reflecting the sunshine's golden gleam, Through meadows so green and fresh and fair. And gemmed with bright flowers that sweeten the air With never a rock to ripple or stay Its course, as it flows on its seaward way?

Or will life be darkened by grief and pain Like a river swollen with Autumn rain Rushing along with a sullen roar 'Neath gloomy skies, past a barren shore, Bearing away on its stormy tide Leaves of bright hopes, once the glad summer's pride

Shall I kneel this year at the honest shrine. And offer my all to the Giver divine? Or the world-will it claim the best of my love, Alluring my heart from the treasure above? To the flowers that die will my care be given Or to culture immortelles to blossom in heaven.

Or the tolling bell and the quiet tomb, And the still cold heart and death's lonely gloom And the shattered hopes and last words said, And the silent rest with the peaceful dead; And sweet pale blossoms scattered there With the trustful hope of the parting prayer.

Ah, life is checkered of sorrow and care, We all must take our destined share ; If our path be sunny and happy to-day, To-morrow dark clouds may o'ershadow our way, The clearer the sunshine the deeper the shade And the brighter the flower the swifter to fade.

If the shadowy future is bringing to me Days bright with life's blessings, a heart light and free Or dark in their gloom and burdened with fears, With their lessons of pain and fast falling tears, Not my will but thine, O my Father for me Only guide me through life home to heaven and Theo

SAVE THE BOY.

· Once he sat upon my knee, Looked from sweet eyes into mine, Questioned me so wondrously Of the mysteries divine, Once he fondly clasped my neck,

Pressed my neck with kisses sweet; Oh, my heart! we little reck Where may rove the precious feet. Once his laugh, with merry ring, Filled our house with music rare, And his loving hands would bring Wreaths of blossom for my hair. Oh, the merry, happy sprite,

Constant, ceaseless source of joy ! But to-night, O God, to-night, Where, oh, where's my wandering boy? Midst the glitter and the glare

Of the room where death is dealt, Scarce you'd know him ; but he's there,-He who once so reverent knelt At my knee, and softly spoke Words into the ear of God.

Oh, my heart! 'tis smitten, broke, Crushed, I bend beneath the rod. Oh, this curse that spoiled my boy, Led him down and down to death,

Robbed me of my rarest joy. Made a pang of every breath! Mothers, fathers, hear my plea! Let your pleadings pierce the sky; Pray and work most earnestly; Let us save our boys, or die!

A NOBLE REVENGE.

Rufus Lee ran home from school, through the hot sun, without stopping to take breath even, dashed in at the front door and through the house, calling for his mother. Not finding her, he went to his own little room at the head of the stairs, where, an hour later, Mrs. Lee found him asleep, two great tears on his cheek. She sat down beside him very quietly. In a moment he muttered, Revenge! See if I don't have revenge!"

The sound of his own voice must have awakened him. "What was I saying, mama? Oh, I know George Ross is just horrid! He has been teasing me for a week; he tore my copy-book, upset my ink, pinched me in class, and now he says he'll come at night and beat my new pony. No use to lock the stable; he'll climb in the window. What shall I do, mama.!"

"Just what you said in your sleep-have your

'Oh!" exclaimed Rufus, thinking that he, no less than the Chinese officers, could see a new meaning in the word "revenge."

"Do you mean I shall think about this story and find how I can do the same to George, mama!" But Mrs. Lee had gone away again, leaving Rufus to his own thoughts. He really began to like the idea of turning George into a friend. "I might give him some of my old playthings; he hasn't many. The Bible says, 'If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink; perhaps it means, 'Show them some kindness that they need as much as they do food and water.' Now, that kindness would be a ride on my pony. There! I have it. I'll lend him Sylph this very afternoon."

Rufus went to school, his face really shining with joy. When he saw George's frown, his good resoutions shook a little; but when the moment came o make the offer, he did it in such a frank, pleasant way that George was won.

"You don't mean that I shall have a ride on your horse, Rufus Lee?" "Indeed, I do mean that you shall go home with me to dinner, and take as long a ride as you want Barrington, N. S. this very afternoon. Let us be good friends after George thought of those Bible verses we have just quoted, and said to himself, "I feel ever so much ashamed! It is real true that he is 'heaping coals of fire upon my head." "-S. S. Visitor.
