A PASSING CLOUD.

BY LINA.

Creeping softly creeping,

Creeping, ever creeping,

Dwelling in my home,

Shading every blessing.

Shining, brightly shining,

Beaming, gently beaming,

Rainbow hues of love,

Silv'ring o'er the cloudlets,

Welcome then the shadows,

Fulfiling each their mission,

Shadows dim the bright things,

Making them more true ;

Little sunbeams, too,

Finding work to do.

Sunbeams ever gladden.

Like the morning dew.

Thus life's scenes are varied,

The sunlight and the shade

Sunbeams chase the shadows.

Smiles dry up the tear-drops,

Flowers drink up the dew ;

More brightly gleams the starlight,

For the darkness it shines through.

Over hill and glade :

Making home so bright ;

Little rays of light ;

Messengers of mercy,

Pointing us above.

Shadows everywhere ;

Lurking here and there, Twining around my heart-strings,

With their deep'ning gloom.

Well, yes, I can't say but I do get sick of the sight of Vienna creams and plain rolls once in a gize. while, and as for cake, I don't think I've tasted a bit for these two years ; but standing behind the counter week in and week out, as I do, one sees a great deal of human nature.
