CANADA'S NATIONAL HYMN.

COMPOSED BY LORD LORNE. The following is the hymn which has been com posed by the Marquis of Lorne, and dedicated to Canada. It has been set to music by Mr. Arthur Sullivan :-

God bless our wide Dominion, Our father's chosen land, And bind in lasting union, Each ocean's distant strand From where Atlantic terrors Our hardy seaman train, To where the salt sea mirrors The vast Pacific chain.

O bless our wide Dominion. True Freedom's fairest scene; Defend our people's union, God Save our Empire's Queen. Fair days of fortune send her, Be thou her Shield and Sun! Our land, our flag's Defender, Unite our hearts as one! One flag, one land, upon her! May every blessing rest! For loyal faith and honor

O bless, etc. No stranger's foot, insulting, Shall tread our country's soil; While stands her sons exulting For her to live and toil. She hath the victor's nurture, Her's are the conquering hours, No foeman's stroke shall hurt her, "This Canada of ours." O bless, etc.

Her children's deeds attest!

Our sires, when times were sorest, Asked none but aid Divine, And cleared the tangled forest, And wrought the buried mine. They tracked the floods and fountains, And won the master hand, Far more than golden mountains, The glorious Prairie land. O bless, etc.

O! Giver of earth's treasure, Make thou our nation strong Pour fourth Thine hot displeasure On all who work our wrong ! To our remotest border Let plenty still increase, Let Liberty and Order Bid ancient feuds to cease. O bless, etc.

May Canada's fair daughters Keep house for hearts as bold As their's who o'er the waters Came hither first of old. The pioneers of nations, They showed the world the way, Tis ours to keep their stations And lead the van to-day.

Inheritors of glory, O countrymen! we swear To guard the flag that o'er ye Shall onward victory bear. Where'er through earth's far regions Its triple crosses fly, For God, for home our legions Shall win, or fighting, die. O bless, etc.

O bless, etc.

The Fireside.

LITLLE NINA.

R. B. B. In 18-, Bendigo, in Australia, presented a strange sight to a stranger, or even to a Colonist. A vast canvas city had sprung up almost in a day, and where but a short time before the howling of the dingo or the harsh scream of the gaudy parrot only were heard, now rang the hoarse shout or merry laugh of the stalwart miner as he toiled and sweated in pursuit of gold. A strange sight these gold-diggers were to a stranger-men of every clime and every nation co-mingling in rough freedom. Here was a Frenchman, with the patois not off his tongue, and there a Turk ignorant almost of composed of Russians, Spaniards, Americans, English, and perhaps, Negroes, Maoris, or Chinamen; and it seemed as if every country in the wide world stood represented in the throng of men there found. Unlettered men and college graduates, old convicts earth for the yellow dust that, when obtained, was it is indeed heavenly manna! spent in mad and reckless carousing. Strange fascination that gold has for humanity, to arouse their passions inflame their minds, and bring them from the uttermost parts of the earth in pursuit

It seemed as if it had power to destroy every thing good in a man's breast, and thousands of men for it have cast off every restraint of society, friends, and even of religion, allured by gold. Yet law was not altogether wanting there, for the diggers well knew it could not be dispensed with entirely; but it was Lynch law, and often the unfortunate wretch committed his crime, was tried and hung within a Rough, coarse and reckless as they were, beneath this there was a kindness and a love for others you would searce have dreamed of being in them, and which they themselves hardly knew was there. It is a strange and wonderful thing that though you take humanity and degrade them, though sin and wickedness cover them as a flood, you cannot deface everything of good that remains in the human bosom; so amongst the toilers for goldthough reckless of restraint and careless, even, of shedding man's blood in their anger, you would find some of the noblest characteristics of the human soul. Their gold would be readily subscribed for a fellow unfortunate, or kindness shown to a sick "mate" in the way of nursing, etc., little to be expected from such a class of men.

At the time we speak of, the "gold fever" was at its height, and men left every kind of employment to try their fortune at mining. Ships lay idly in the harbor, because their crews had desert- cord was loosed. Her gentle spirit had taken its year, is a preventive against moths. ed though offered ten times the usual wages to make flight to that world where sin and sorrow are unthe home voyage; and places of business were often known, and where the redeemed from every nation flat Irons as clean as glass. Tie a lump of beeswax any money. A perfect mania seemed to have seized the land, and all the population was swarmthe mania for gold. Renben Marley, her father, was a determined man-though unsuited for the rough work, yet made were on the spot, and began working to get out the thy face. Thou has no idea what a beautiful froth beneath such a mass; and it proved so, for when to go home and make it."

the body was dug out life was found to be totally extinct. When the truth was known beyond a doubt, a wild shriek rang through the air-the dead man's wife fell on the ground beside him, senseless. Rough but kind hands raised her, and carefully conveyed her to a tent, and a doctor was speedily found, who used every means in his power to revive her, but for hours unsuccessfully.

When she awoke from her lethargic state she passed rapidly into a state of wild delirium. Nurses were procured-for there were women on the diggings, though few-and everything done that the medical aid then to be obtained could suggest; but it was useless. The shock was too severe for her delicate constitution, and in a few days she was placed by the side of him she loved so fondly.

Poor little Nina was heart-broken; she could scarcely understand the terrible reality of the affliction that had befallen her in thus being deprived of father and mother at one stroke. For days she would go about moaning piteously, "Oh, mamma, will you not come back !" "Won't I see you again?" Many a rough digger felt a strange feeling in his breast as he saw the agony of the little orphan, and found the big tears swelling up in his eyes as he strove to say some word of comfort to the little girl. When the father's papers were all searched over, it was found they gave no clue to where he came from or to his relations, his letters probably being left behind with goods too heavy to transport to the diggings, where carriage of goods was so high. As soon as this was known the owners of the next claim, whose names were respectively Harvey Balsille, Rox and Beaumont, generally known there as "Bill," "Geordy," "Harvey," and "Sandy," with the rough generosity so characteristic of their class, made a proposition to solve the difficulty of finding a home for the little Nina. They offered to pay a Mrs. Wallace, who had two girls in her family, a sum per week to act as a mother to the little girl, while they would consider her as belonging to themselves. The arrangement was readily agreed to, and little Nina soon spent most of her time on their claim, finding a delight in watching the movements of these men who loved her for her innocent ways better than their lives. As time went on, her natural buoyancy asserted itself, and she became something of the child she was before that time could not entirely obliterate. A strange sight it was to see-that delicate, gold-haired little child running about the claims, talking now with one, now with another of these rough men, taking her meals often with them, asking them if they she soon caught up the digging phrases and became deeply interested in all that concerned them.

The others laughed at his fears, but he was right; there was a change in Nina, and the others had to care to change places with the Czar of all the Rusacknowledge it before long. She was fading away; too fair a flower for earth, it seemed as if the Great Gardener was going to transplant her to a clime more suited to her nature, where she might bloom forever in the sunshine of God's eternal love : where the chilling blasts of sin would be unknown.

Medical skill proved of no avail; day after day she sank slowly, and the hectic flush on her delicate cheek showed that the end must soon come. The golden cord was nearly loosed. She was cheerful however, although her declining strength had taken away her merry, ringing laugh, once the delight of the miners. At last a day came on which she could not rise, so weak had she grown, and her friends, the diggers, had to go to her bedside when they wished to see her. As her earthly nature declined, she grew stronger in the divine nature The only book she cared to read was her mother's Bibie, and this she would spend hours in reading, and took a deep delight in so doing, and thinking of the time in the near future English, and scattered about would be found groups when she should tread the streets of that Jerusalem were gold is so common they make the streets of it, and where she should see the beloved father and mother who had gone before her. > The fatal day came at last, and she lay on her bed surrounded by her faithful friends, now nearly heart-broken, who gazed upon her, while tears they could not help coursed down their rugged cheeks. There was a strange, unearthly look about her face as though some of the brightness of the next world shone upon her, but she shed no tears. With her little hands now clasping one, now another of the hands of her loving friends, she waited the signal of the Great Shepherd. The golden cord was nearly broken. She had been talking with them of heaven and how glad she would be to get there, but how sorry also she was to leave them behind on earth when she would meet Jesus there, and she made all of them promise that they would meet her there, for, said she, in her childish way, "I don't think I could be happy if you were not all there." She lay for some time without speaking, then raising herself slightly she said to "Geordy," "Read about heaven." In a voice choked with sobs he read those beautiful words, "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth had passed away; and there was no for a reason replied, it was because they could not there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying," he stopped, for she was talking in a quick, otherwise?" eager voice, "Oh, how beautiful it is! look, look at the angels smiling at me; and there is one holding out his arms, with such a look of love; it must be Jesus, he has thorns on his head !" and holding out her arms and half rising she said "Jesus! Jesus!" and fell back on her bed. The golden

A BEAST TAMER'S FATE.

Karolyi, a magyar of gigantic proportions and strength, by profession a tamer of wild beasts. lately fell a victim to a snake. He was performing before a crowded audience in Madrid one of his sensational feats, which consisted in allowing a huge boa constrictor, over twenty feet in length, to enfold his body in its tremendous coils. Suddenly a piercing cry escaped him, which he greeted by a round of applause, under the supposition that his utterance constituted a part of the performance. It proved, however, to be the exclamation of a strong man in agony. The gigantic snake had her parents' death; but that had left deep traces tightened his coils, and was crushing Karolyi's life out of him with one terrific squeeze. As the man's head fell back and his eyes became fixed in a glassy stare, the plaudits died away, and were succeeded stare, the plaudits died away, and were succeeded der's Liniment, Universal Liniment, Segee's Ointment. by the stillness of utter consternation. The snake and its lifeless victim swayed for a second or two of "had struck a patch," or some such question, for inexpressible horror, and then toppled over on the boards of the stage.

But the boa did not in the least relax his grip On Sunday she would read to them, in her child- upon the body, which remained for more than an powers such appalling proof had been given. Power of Superstition. -An amusing anecdote is told by an American authoress in a work on Hindostan, which, though it refers to the pagan Him dus, might find it counterpart elsewhere. "At Ulwar the British agent wished to plant an avenue of trees on either side of the road in front of the shops for the purpose of giving welcome shade. He accordingly made choice of peepul trees, as they are considered sacred by the Hindus. But so soon as the native shopkeepers heard of his selection, they one and all declared that if this were done tell untruths or swear falsely under their shade adding, 'And how can we carry on our busin
