After several other persons had spoken, the six months' hoist was carried on a division. The House proceeded to the consideration of the Deceased Wife's Sister's Bill.

The bill was carried by I40 to 20. Mr. Fleming, introduced a bill to amend the Immigration Act, by rendering masters of vessels able for the maintenance of pauper immigrants brought by them to Canada. Mr. Onimet introduced a bill to repeal the acts forbidding dual representation.

Mr. Mackenzie resumed his argument in the Pacific Railway debate, arguing that the Macdonald Government plan of the building by a company, with a land grant and thirty million dollars, had broken down. He would reserve the further consideration of the bill until the estimates came down. Sir Charles Tupper, in the absence of Sir S. L. Tilley, said that the estimates would be down at three o'clock on Monday, and on Tuesday the Bud-get Speech would be delivered.

from the Globe's report are as follows: The barque Eblana sailed from Newport, Wales. on the 24th of January for this port with a cargo of 400 tons of coal. There were sixteen persons in part of the passage, and the small spars were carried away. The vessel got safely into the Bay, however, and on Sunday night at 8 o'clock made Briar Island. All hands were looking to a speedy arrival in port, and the Captain was especially joyand threatening; and shortly before one o'clock snow began to fall. A gale sprang up, and the veswere seen. It was not known where the vessel was, and only a moment before orders had been issued to cast the lead. An alarm was given, but it was now too late; the vessel struck bottom, an effort to wear her around failed, and she went bow on under the face of a frowning precipice. It did of May; the work being well done speaks for itself. A violent storm was raging, the vessel began to bump and thump on the rocks, huge waves washed over the decks, nothing could be seen in the pitchy darkness but the wall of rock in front. Death surely stared them in the face. The men set to work at once to try and save their lives. They first launched their boats, but one after another the three boats were destroyed. There was no other resource now than to take to the rigging and there of the steward and his wife and child, two able seamen and a boy, had gone forward and securely lashed themselves to the chain plates. The others mentioned got into the mizzen rigging. Presently t was seen the vessel was settling aft. The poundng on the rocks had smashed in her bottom, and the water was pouring in. The barque suddenly lurched over on her broadside, and the waves washed off the woman, her child, and the three sailors. Sea after sea threatened to wash then all away, and they dared not move. Had the captain and mate clung to the wreck like the others they might have been saved. The loss of those in the mizzen rigging seemed to affect Captain Barry, and he deterand then to obtain a line from the vessel for the others to escape by.
