The fireside.

A STORY FOR THE BOYS. It was a rainy afternoon, and my six-year-old nephew and I were sitting on the rug in front of the fire. Frank was stretched out full length on the soft, white rug ; I, in my own particular chair, sat patiently awaiting the request for "a story," which I knew would be very sure to come sooner last, planting his chin on his brown hands and gazing straight into the burning coals.

"When your Uncle Tom and I were children," began I slowly, "we were ever such good friends, and although I am eight years older than he, we even my peanuts good unless Tom had some : half my goodies were always saved for him.

like this, dear-I sat looking out of the window at a poor little meadow-lark that stood shivering and wet on the edge of the porch. I soon called Tom coming, and not knowing he was so near me, I accidentally struck him in the face with my elbow.

" Horrid, awkward thing ! growled Tom, and ] received a blow from his strong little fist which I am sorry to say was not accidental. Mother had just come in, and she saw the whole scene. She made Tom sit alone on a sofa away from the window and bird, till he should grow good-natured again. But Tom was not to be soothed in any such a way, for he was really angry.

" 'Horrid, awkward old thing !' he muttered again between his teeth. 'I just won't stay in the house with such a girl ! I'll run away, so I will. I'll run away to-night,' he added in a louder voice, intending to attract my attention and thinking to frighten " 'What's that !' said mother. 'Run away from

THE THREE GOLD DOLLARS. In the year 1860 I was living with my sister i

Maryland. I had agreed to work with her for my victuals and clothing, but whenever I could get a day's work in the neighborhood, I was to have what I earned thus for spending money; but as wages were low and work scarce, I had not much money. One Sunday morning I walked five miles to a school-house in York County, Pennsylvania, to attend a meeting, the object of which was to organize a Sunday-school there. A young man, Mr. K. addressed the meeting, and then went around to see how much he could get subscribed toward the expense of starting a school. He asked me what I "Make it a real true one, auntie," he said at would give. I could not say, as I had no money on hand, but he told me I could have some time to make it up, so, hoping to earn it, I said he might put down one dollar for me. He did so, and went to the next one, who agreed to give fifty cents, another subscribed twenty-five cents; the object was were always together. My pleasure was never real gained, the school organized, and we are all told to that grows pleasanter every day. He begins to deunless Tom shared it too. Toffy was not sweet nor bring the promised money at the time appointed.

As I walked home in company with several your ladies, one said to me, "Why did you put down "But Tom's temper sometimes got the better of one dollar? Now I promised fifty cents, and I him, and when provoked—but wait a little and you know my parents will be displeased, and it is your fault." "It is the same way with me," said an other; "I subscribed twenty-five cents, and I would not have done so if it had not been for you. I know my parents will not like it.'

I did not blame them for dreading the displeasur of their parents, as I was at that time myself ar to look, too, but when I turned to see if he was exile from my father's house because I had gone to church against his will; but their words pained me, as I was sorry to think that my giving had caused We soon came to a cross road, and while they took the left hand road that led to their several homes, I alone took the right hand road which led for about three miles along a forest, where, as was noonday, the trees made a refreshing shade.

As I walked along this lonesome road I felt very sorry for my young friends, and as the tears began to roll down my cheeks, I thought, "What if I car. not earn the money, and will have to ask my sister for it? She may not like it either; and she cannot well afford to give it to me."

My distress now became great, but just then there came a gentle whisper, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." "Yes," I said thinking that sweet text had come to my relief " 'The earth is the Lord's and the fullness there of; there is nothing impossible with God, he car "'Very well,' said mother, looking at me and | well supply my wants; so I will ask him for the money;" so I went into the forest behind a rock prayer to God. -Mrs. Hattie F. Belt, in Rural New Yorker. GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH ONE'S FATHER.

BY EGBERT L. BANGS. I once heard a father say to his son, a bright boy, eventeen years old, 'My boy, how much I enjoy your company. It would be just fun to take a journey with you now; you would make a downright charming companion."

That boy was like many other boys in this dear and of ours. He was full of kinks and crotchets; but he was good at heart. He had a strong will, and sometimes, while he was between eight and fifteen years old, it seemed almost impossible for him to do just what he was told to do. He loved to hold an argument, generally taking the contrary side. There is a time in the life of almost every boy when he is a real nuisance. He thinks he knows it all, and sees unreasonableness in most of the plans that his father lays to benefit him.

But, thank heaven, there comes a time when the boy begins to understand his father. A change comes over him, and very often it is so gradual that you notice it just as you notice the faint, purple hue stealing over your green grapes. The boy, like the grapes, is getting off the green, and with the green, he leaves off some of his sour, puckery qualities, and, like the ripening grapes, there is a flavor in his conversation and manners velop a spirit of regard for his mother that crops out in a thousand nameless little attentions th are as dear to her as were similar attentions from the dear boy's father, twenty years ago. And what says the father to himself as he sees this change in nanner and disposition coming so gracefully and pleasantly over the boy? He says: "The boy does pay after all: he is a good investment, worth all he has cost and more too." The boy has now learned to know his father and to some extent to see him is he is, and appreciate his motives.

I wonder if something like this does not often take place in the Christian's experience. Wayward. capricious, fickle as spoiled children, unreasonable and quick to find fault, ready to murmur at the housand things that are out of kilter—even Chrisians go on year after year, in ways that must readfully try the patience of their heavenly Father.

But by and by there comes a change with them lso. Somehow they grow milder, more trusting nore ready to live one day at a time, and take what God sends them. They are like the boy who has arned to know his father. They have learned to know their heavenly Father. Should any one disheartened and discouraged with his own shor!omings, ever feel like saying, "It is of no use to try to be good," look for a moment at the boy, who has learned to know you, and you will have a faint idea of the way God looks upon you. The best of all this is, even crooked Christians, disagreeable in the church, and always on the contrary side, do, in the long run, come to understand their heavenly Father, and it is no small comfort for any Christian to believe that some day his heavenly Father may rejoice over him, even as he himself rejoices over the boy who has come to understand and appreciate and love his earthly father .-- Morning Star.
