MY REFUGE.

As I stand here secure in my Refuge Aside from the gay, thoughtless throng, I see myriads moving before me As they pass pleasure's pathway along, And I feel the faint perfume of flowers, And I hear low, sweet snatches of song.

But I know that the flowers with their fragrance Are concealing some treacherous snare, And the sweet song is sung by some siren With face and form faultlessly fair, Who entices men into her mansion, And ruthlessly murders them there.

And I know there is danger most dreadful For those who are walking that way, And that terrible trials and temptations Are laying in wait for the gay, And that poisonous serpents are lnrking Low coiled 'mid the flowers all the day.

Once I drank of the cup dissipation Till the dark bitter dregs came in view, And I scorned and avoided the persons Who advised me the good to pursue, And I madly selected companions From among those who wickedness do.

And I walked with the multitude wildly In the pathway of pleasure and sin, Rushing recklessly past yawning pitfalls, Never dreaming the music was din, Until glorious grace to me given Plainly taught me how rash I had been. And convinced me that I was in darkness.

Far deeper than gloomiest night, And it brought me safe into the Refuge, And showed me the glorious light That shone from the City Immortal, So brightly it dazzled my sight. So I stand with my soul full of pity

For the mortals so near the abyss Of the dreadful destruction before them, And I faithfully warn them of this, And I speak of a path that will lead them To realms of infinite bliss. But they glance at me only a moment, And pursue gilded pleasures again,

And sometimes I see scorn on their faces,

Then I know that my warnings are vain, And to see them rush thus to destruction Fills my spirt with bitterest pain. Would you learn the sure road to the Refuge, Ye thoughtless, and youthful, and fair? It leads through repentance and sorrow Unto joy inexpressible there;

And the Saviour will carefully guide you, If you earnestly ask him in prayer. CHARLES LEE BARNES.

KATE WILBER'S WILFULNESS AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

BY AUNT MEB.

"I think you have said quite enough; I am going at any rate!" and as she spoke, the young girl arose, with an angry air, and going to the open window, looked out upon the scene before her with an energy of interest quite equal to a first observation of something of unusual attractiveness. you go now with cousin Emma and me?" ed-Kate cast a glance toward the wretched manwho was indeed dead drunk-her crimson cheeks evincing her mortification and disgust, and mechanically took the proffered arm of Emma's cousin, with a formal "thanks," and they walked away.

For once in her life Kate was too vexed with the turn events had taken to excuse herself, in her own eyes even, and this was quite remarkable, inasmuch as it had been her habit, no matter how great the misdemeanor, to cover any feelings of regret that might have been aroused with an air of carelessness; supported by an intensified degree of gayety and nonsense; but acting as she did to-day from sheer wilfulness, she felt-and truly so-that to no on but herself could she attach blame in the affair.

Her chagrin was only augmented by the thought of the unflattering impression she must have given Mr. Starkweather, who from all appearances was a gentleman of high culture, and in whose estimation she felt the moment she saw him that it would reflect credit upon a young lady to stand well.

The family were at tea when Kate reached home a this unenviable frame of mind, and true to the old thought that mishaps never occur singly, the intelligence was conveyed by the servant who admitted her that Mr. Fairbanks was there! At any other time Kate would have gone at once into the dining-room, and have given her lover a frank, cordial welcome in the presence of them all; but to night she said hurriedly to the servant,

"I will be down directly," and went to her own room as quickly as possible. As she closed the door of her room, her agitated feelings found expression in a flood of tears, realizing as she did that the hardest part of her wilful proceeding ways yet to ceme; for, as her cousin had said, she, too, be lieved that Phil Fairbanks would not approve of her course when he should hear who had been her escort. If nothing unusual had happened, she did not fear getting his pardon when she should have explained affairs according to her own method; but to have him know that she had chosen to accompany a young man who would dare to show such disrespect for a young lady of acknowledged refinement, was more than her proud nature could accept without a struggle. These and other thoughts crowded upon her as she tried to regain her selfpossession and to clear away all traces of her emotion, in as short a space of time as possible, that she might join the family. They were passing through the hall from the dinning-room into the parlor as she ventured to descend, and hastening, that she might be among them before they were

THE LITTLE GRAVE. "It's only a little grave," they said

"Only just a child that's dead," And so they carelessly turned away From the mould the spade had made that day. Ah! they did not know how deep a shade That little grave in our home had made! I know the coffin was narrow and small, One yard would have served for an ample pall One man in his arms could have borne away The casket frail and its freight of clay. But I knew that darling hopes were hid Beneath that tiny coffin-lid.

I knew that a mother had stood that day With folded arms by that form of clay; I knew that burning tears were hid, "'Neath the drooping lash of aching lid," And I knew her lip and cheek and brow Were almost as white as her baby's now.

I knew that some things were hid away-

The crimson frock and wrappings gay;

The little sock and the half-worn shoe,

The cap with its plumes and tassels blue; And an empty crib with its covers spread, As white as the face of the precious dead. 'Tis a liftle grave, but O, beware! For world-wide hopes are buried there, And ye, perhaps, in coming years, May see, like her, through blinding tears How much of light, how much of joy, Is buried up with an only boy.

It acts with vigor, gentleness and subtlety, owing to the exquisite harmony of its ingredients, akin to pure blood itself. Its taste is pleasant, and its effects permanent. Its first apparent effect is to increase the appetite. It assists digestion, and causes the food to assimilate properly—thus the system is nourished. It also, by its tonic action on the digestive organs, induces more copious and regular evacuations. The rapidity with which patients take on flesh while under the influence of the Syrup, of itself indicates that no other preparation can be better adapted to help and nourish the constitution, and hence be more efficacious in all depression of spirits, shaking or trembling of the hands or body, cough, shortness of breath, or consumptive habit. The nerves and muscles become strengthened, and the blood purified.

Memory.

READ WHAT THE INVENTOR, MR. FELLOWS, HAS TO SAY ABOUT HIS SYRUP OF THE HYPOPHOSPHITES.

In the summer of 1864, I was suddenly effected by a copious expectoration of muco-purulent matter. I had been declining in health for some months, and, being exceedingly nervous, the symptoms caused alarm. As my business was that of a dispensing chemist, the shop was constantly visited by medical men, all of whom tendered their advice. During 1864 and 1865 my chest was examined by ten first class physicians, some of whom pronounced the case Bronchitis; some, not wishing to cause alarm, or unwilling to venture an opinion, gave no decision; some stated unequivocally that I had Tubercular Disease of the Lungs, and located the trouble where the pains were felt. By professional advice, I used, in turn, horse-back exercise, country life, eggs and ale in the morning, tonics, Bourbon whiskey, cod-liver oil, electricity, tar, and various inhalents, but the trouble increased. Expectoration became more profuse and offensive. Night-sweats set in. Cold chills, diarrhoea, dyspnœa, cough, blood-streaked expectorations, loss of sleep, loss of appetite, loss of memory, loss of ambition, accompanied by general prostration, showed themselves. Under the microscope the blood was found to contain but a small portion of vitalized corpuscles; the heart's action was feeble; the pulse intermittent; the stomach could not digest properly, so that flatulency and acidity was the result. Finding the symptoms indicated Consumption, I determined to use every effort to stay its progress, and, if possible, to care it. (2 selected the most powerful tonics and mederators, and combined them with the vital constituents of the human body. For months I endeavored to amalgamate them before my efforts were crowned with success. I cannot speak too plainly or too strongly of the effects produced, and the benefits I received from the composition.

off st my appetite increased; the expectoration became easy, digestion better; the ficers became more copious and less frequent; cold chills ceased; night-sweats lessened; I gained in weight; the hacking cough left me; refreshing sleep returned; my spilits became buoyant, the mind active and vigorous. I continued taking the Syrup month after month; but owing to the damp, foggy climate of St. John, my recovery was necessarily slow, although I could observe a gradual return of strength for three years, during which time I continued taking the remedy. My present weight is one hundred and eighty-eight, being thirty-eight above my usual. I have no symptons left denoting disease. The only notable sign during twelve months was the expectoration. Now that has stopped, and I consider myself well. The reader may ask, How do you know your difficulty to have proceeded from ulcerated or tuberculated lung? I answer, In the most certain of all modes for ascertaining. In March last I coughed from the right lung a piece of PHOSPHATE OF LIME, half the size of a pea, which could have come from no other place, and which the highest authority in Lung Diseases (Laennec) states is the result of tubercle, which has been cured. Added to this, I had the leaden-colored, purulent, blood - streaked expectoration, and the opinion of one of the best diagnosticians in the country. I believe I have experienced all the symptoms incident to the two first stages of Consumption, and have successfully combatted them, so that I do not despair of any case where there is left sufficient lung tissue to build upon. I can only add that the mere monetary consideration of increased sales would never induce me to publish this report, but a sincere sympathy for the poor Consumptive, with whose misfortune I believe it villany to trifle.
