A Chinese, who, after completing a portion of his studies in Germany has returned to his native country, sends to the Israelite some interesting information relative to the Jews in China. He confirms the statements previously made that they are termed by the Chinese "Tiaoking-tiaa" ie., the sect which plucks out the sinew;" and that they dress like the other inhabitants, and are only distinguished from them by their religious observances. They enjoy perfect freedom, and are protected by the State from any attacks. According to historical works, Jews first made their appearance in China about 200 years before the Christian era.
