many cases. There are men who have moulded the thought of the age who have been as guileless as a child. There are those who have been good cause, in which they were engaged, and upon whom no one would think of charging an nuworthy personal ambition.

But these persons are the exceptions. The most of us need to contend against an unholy desire for preeminence. The most of us need to learn the lesson that Jesus taught his disciples: "Whosoever will be great among you, et him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant." We may worthily desire to be preeminent in completely than did he. Not that he was selfish esteemed not for their value in money, but be-

BE THOROUGH.-It pays to do well that which should be done, and little duties unperformed are liable at times to result in great damage. A letter carrier in one of our large cities a few months ago found on reaching the post office, after a long round of delivery, a letter in his bag that he had overlooked. It would have taken him half an hour to return and deliver it. He was very tired and hungry. The letter was an ordinary unimportant looking missive. He put ing the winter for many of the necessaries of life, but his loss was of small account compared to the enormous amount of misery caused by his
