Poetry.

THREE-SCORE AND TEN Three-score and ten! Stand firm in thy lot. Faithful and true to the end; Bending thine ear to catch every word Of the message the Master doth send; Wakeful thine eye, for far spent is the night; Burnished thine armor, thou soldier of light;

Ready to march, for the day-star is bright; Bold in the fight For truth and right ! Thou a conqueror shalt stand With the exulting blood-bought band. Three-score and ten! And what shall we add To measure the earthly strife? How many sands are left in the glass,

Counting the years of life? One by one they silently fall, One by one till have fallen all, One by one till thy God shall call : "Thy race is run, Servant, well done

Faithful in thy Lord's employ, Enter now into his joy !"

THERE IS NO HEART.

.- Independent.

There is no heart but has its inner anguish; There is no eye but hath with tears been wet; O'er hours of darkness it can ne'er forget.

There is no cheek, however bright its roses, But cherished buds beneath its haes are hid; No eye that in its dewy light reposes,

But broken star-beams tremble 'neath its lid. There is no lip, howe'er with laughter ringing, However light and gay its words may be, But it hath trembled at some dark uprising Of stern affection and deep misery.

We are all brothers in this land of dreaming ; Yet hand meets hand, and eye to eye replies Nor dream we that beneath a brow all beaming The flower of life in broken beauty lies.

Oh! blessed light that guides our night of sorrow Oh! balm of Gilead for our healing found; We know that peace will come with the to-morrow, And that afflictions spring not from the ground

BOB'S TEMPTATION.

FOR THE BOYS. There never was a boy who loved fun more than

Bob Turner; and there was never a boy within my knowledge that was so constantly in disgrace and tribulation as the self-same Bob. Everybody liked him, and everybody dreaded to have him around almost. His teachers liked him always, and yet they blessed the day when he staid from school As for his mother, what a life he led her! But not one of her other children, so steady and reliable, was so dear to her as Bob.

Such frantic efforts as he made to keep straight, and how they always ended in something worse than ever he had done before. The school managers made it a point to warn all new teachers of him, and so of course they warned Miss Willis when she took the school.

"If he does not do better soon," they said, "we shall have to expel him, though it will be a great sorrow to his mother, who is a poor widow.' Miss Willis resolved inwardly that Bob should never be expelled-and he was not. Now it happened on the first Monday she was there that Bob was the first one at school.

"Good morning," said Miss Willis, with a pleasant smile; and then she added: "You're Bo Turner, aren't you?"

"That's just what they call me; but how did you know it?" he answered, in surprise at first, then it came to him. "I suppose the managers told you what a bad boy I am ; I guess." "But I don't believe it of you a bit," was the

I don't know what Bob would not have been willing to give if he could have promised, with any hope of success, that she should have no trouble with him. But, though full of misgivings, he resolved to make an attempt to keep out of mischief and do well. For a day or two he did do wellwell for him; and then, oh dear! I can not say what he did not do. Miss Willis paused. Bob sat speechless.

"Can't he walk a bit?" "No, not a step, and he suffers a great deal of pain; but the doctor thinks he can cure him, if I can pay him."

A long pause followed. If anything in the world been for him perhaps this boy might have been made well and strong?

"I'll help you-if-if it kills me," said Bob. springing to his feet in his excitement. "I will." suddenly and went out.

To say Bob dreaded school the next day is a very about it-he was in the habit of telling her all about everything. She did not say much, but just as he kissed her "good night" she said softly,-"Robbie, dear, don't you think you had better

She was very busy over her arithmetic-her class recited next-and she was very anxious to keep her place at the head, but the last example would not come right. Now Bob knew all about May's anxieties, for he and May were very, very good friends, and from where he sat he could see May's mistake. He leaned on his desk. " M"-

He sat upright again, with a hot flush on his face, his eyes once more firmly fixed on his book. "If I hadn't asked the Lord last night to help me, I should have done it, I know," he thought to himeff, with thankful heart.

But there was trouble in store for Bob; it was he heard a soft whisper,-"Bob !"

It was May; but he paid no attention to it. He saw her try to attract his attention, still he would There is no voice but hath been heard to languish not lift his eyes. a handsome present. This was, as she said, the last day. What would Bob do? Miss Willis was hearing a class, and she never allowed questions asked during a recitation, or he could have asked to speak to May. Poor, poor Bob, it was a trial for him. A second bit of paper was put on his book, and May turned away from him.

"I shall never speak to you again, Bob Turner. thought you were my friend.' That is what the second bit said. He was almost antic. If Miss Willis would only turn around from the board, he believed he would try to ask her permission to speak. May not be his friend any more? Oh, how dreadful that seemed! He almost yielded. Then there came a thought of the poor cripple boy. No matter how happy May's smile would make him, and how dreadful it would be to lose her friendship-yes, let it cost what it would, he would help this poor cripple. And he ever lifted his eyes.

Than came a happy thought to our young hero as he sorrowfully kept his eyes down, and he listened intently. The moment the class reciting finished, up went his hand.

"Yes, Bob, what is it?" said Miss Willis kindl ' Please don't call the class for just a minute, ant to speak to May." Miss Willis hesitated, there was only just time get through, but Bob's wistful face carried the

How fast the soul travels when the body is asleep! Often when we awake we shrink from going back into the dull outine of a sordid existence, regretting the pleaanter life of dreamland. How is it that sometimes when we go to a strange place, we fancy that we have seen it before? C. GATES & Co.: Gentlemen,—Some time last winter one of my children—a little boy about eighteen months old—was badly frightened, and his health became seriously affected. On the least alarm he used to go off in a kind of a fit, becoming motionless and black in the face, his heart at the same time palpitating in the most alarming manner Each fit was worse than the preceding one, causing us to fear heart disease. Hearing of some of the numerous cures effected by your medicines in this and other locali
