She felt

sure he was there, so she went in quietly. She had often come as far as the door before, but had never ventured in; now, however, the desire to help her father was too strong to be resisted. She paused timidly by the door until she caught sight of him. She then went to him and said coaxingly, "Won't you come home with me now, father? It is so lonesome there all alone. Please do, father." Had an angel dropped into their presence, he would hardly have been more surprised than at the sight of his little golden-haired daughter. He had had a "bad spell," as Daisy called them, a day or two before, and was unusually sober. He felt a sense of shame that she should find him in such a place; he hurried her from the noisy crowd, as if afraid a moment in the defilement of that den of niquity would sully her pure soul. "That is no place for you, Daisy; never go in there again," he said, as soon as they were outside. "But I wanted you," she persisted. "It seemed Quite overlooking yourself and the rest in exalting so dreadful there all alone to-night, and I got thinking of mother, and I couldn't stand it any longer." Mr. Deane signed heavily. His heart smote him as it had done hundreds of times before, when he stopped to think of the lonely little girl waiting hour after hour for his return-and he half made a resolve to try and reform. "But it is of no use, I have tried before; it is too late, too late !" They were silent the rest of the way home. Daisy, wise little schemer, never said a word about the temperance meeting, or the expected call for the next evening.

The next morning dawned clear and bright. Daisy was up early, and had breakfast ready when r father came out of his bedroom. Thanks to

TINY TOKENS.

The murmur of a waterfall A mile away, The rustle when a robin lights Upon a spray, The lapping of a lowland stream On dipping boughs, The sound of grazing from a herd Of gentle cows, The echo from a wooded hill Of cuckoo's call. The quiver through the meadow grass At evening fall. -Too subtle are these harmonies For pen and rule ; Such music is not understood By any school. But when the brain is overwrought

It hath a spell, Beyond all human skill and power. To make it well.

The memory of a kindly word For long gone by, The fragrance of a fading flower Sent lovingly, The gleam of a sudden smile

Or sudden tear, The warmer pressure of the hand,

The tone of cheer, The hush that means, "I cannot speak,

Poetry.

AN ALPHABET OF MAXIMS FROM

LONGFELLOW'S POEMS.

Better be dead and forgotten, than living in shame

Challenge the passing hour like guards that keep

This world would school each wandering thought

Their solitary watch on tower and steep.

From labor there shall come forth rest.

Heaven is as near by water as by land.

Some day must be dark and dreary.

Glass is the world's luck and pride.

Into each life some rain must fall,

Joy and temperance and repose,

Know how sublime a thing it is,

Lovest thou God as thou oughtest,

Man is unjust, but God is just.

Our to-days and yesterdays

your hero.

The strongest fall.

Of earth and folly born.

Think of thy brother no ill,

Nothing that is can pause or stay.

Are the blocks with which we build.

Pride goeth forth on horseback grand and gay,

But cometh back on foot and begs its way.

Relentless sweeps the stroke of fate.

Sleep, sleep to-day, tormenting cares

But throw a veil over his failings.

Use no violence, nor do in haste

What can not be undone.

Then lovest thou likewise thy brethren.

To suffer and be strong.

Slam the door on the doctor's nose.
