

"My brethren," said a Western clergyman, "the preaching of the Gospel to some people is like pouring water over a sponge—it soaks in and stays. To others it is like the wind blowing through a chicken-coop. My experience of this congregation is that it contains more chicken-coops than sponges." How is it in your church?

The only lion on a farm of which a Norfolk, Va., man died seized and which he left to his two sons, was a claim of $3. The heirs wanted a division, so the court ordered a sale of the farm. Here is a chance for some one. A very large estate in Cornwall, England, has been bequeathed to "somebody named Jones" in the United States. If all the Joneses in America file application for the legacy the right man will doubtless be discovered, and at all events the post-office department will be benefited by the amount of extra postage which the applications will cost.

The casualness of humanity finds another illustration in the illness of Queen Caroline of Saxony, who is suffering from fatigue and indigestion superinduced by a season of preserve-making. Such was the Queen's devotion to jams and jellies that she labored through many consecutive days and nights during the fruit season, and is now paying the penalty of her housewifely energy.

The inability of a lawyer to answer a question directly is illustrated by a recent exchange of letters between the Chicago lawyer, E. A. Tamm, and a friend. The latter asked Mr. Tamm whether the first name was "Emory" or "Emory," and Mr. Tamm replied by saying: "My signature, heretofore, appended, will settle the matter, and the question," and then wrote three pages about social and political matters, at the end of which were these words: "Yours truly, Emory."

A great change is going on in the character of the population of the Sandwich Islands. The Chinese adult men outnumber the Hawaiians; Portuguese Romanians are coming in large numbers from the Madeira Islands; thirty French priests are busy in the interests of the Papacy; English soldiers are all Englishmen. Moreover, they do not miss their opportunity, while the incoming heathenism, with low and debasing customs, tends to drag everything down to its own level.

The man who shot the Munro children at Dalhousie, N. S. (who claimed to have committed the Southern States) really belongs to Annapolis Co., The Bridgetown Monitor sketches his career:

The prisoner's name is Arthur Foster, and he is a son of the late Captain Foster, who was a respectable man and lived in this County near Bridgetown for a number of years. The prisoner's life has been a chequered and eventful one. He attended school at Dalhousie for some time, and while there was chiefly distinguished by the number of whallops the master bestowed upon him. He was a quarrelsome fellow, and was once in a fight with a man who was as big as many of the twenty fights with him; but was always wary of him from the fact that he continually carried on his person some kind of a weapon or other. Foster's father finding that he could do nothing with him, shipped him on board of a ship bound for the East Indies. This ship sailed, and went out to Texas and to New Mexico, and there met and was killed by the wild life of those wild countries. While in a gambling saloon he got into a fight with another man, and was getting the worst of it, when a great black man, who was interfering in a rather violent manner. When they got through with Foster he was badly used up, as he was shot through the thigh, and while the doctor was attending to him, a piece cut off his nose, and he was bruised from head to foot by kicks inflicted with the heavy pair of boots of his antagonist's friends. He was left for dead, but unfortunately recovered, and came finally to this country. For a short time he worked as a painter in the steam furniture manufactory, and also worked as a laborer at Mr. Walker's on the Annapolis side of the river. He has lately been "letting" "out south," part of the time practicing medicine—and of course claims several remarkable cures.
