We regret to learn that our esteemed fellow citizen Mr. James Robertson, Collector of Customs for this port, died at his residence Tuesday evening. The deceased gentleman had been long and favorably known in Montreal, where he was one of the early residents. They have the heartfelt sympathy of all the community in their bereavement.—Transcript.

Eight schooners in the pursuit of herring off Grand Manan and have had very good fares, some of the vessels taking in a full cargo in two days. The fish are salted and cured as soon as caught, and most of them will find their way to St. John. Over a hundred vessels, chiefly from Grand Manan, are engaged in the fishery at present. Herring caught along shore and brought to the St. John Market fish are generally small, and it is apparent that the main fall "run" has not yet reached these shores.—News.

The news says: Again rises the cry that houses to let are scarce and that the rent would bring from $100 to $200 per annum would be taken up immediately, and would pay better than many of the stately palaces now on the market which threaten to bankrupt their owners. There were fifty small but busy and well-equipped houses in the city offered at the above rates, they would all be taken up by the rapidly growing industrial element in this community, as well as men of moderate means generally.

Referring to the telegraphed statement that notes of St. Croix Cotton Mill Company have gone to protest, the Montreal Witness says: One of the trustees of Mr. Morris's business informs us that the St. Croix Mill has a large surplus of cotton, and might draw on Mr. Morris for $40,000 or $50,000 if he were in a position to take it. This $50,000 had no representative at the last meeting here, and so has doubtless failed to make the necessary arrangements to render its paper such as were made with banks by most of the other mills. The trouble will doubtless be only temporary.

On Friday morning a disastrous fire occurred at St. George. Five buildings were destroyed, viz: T. Barry's corner building, containing J. D. Gill's store—dry goods and groceries; John O'Neill's residence, the Post Office and Telegraph office. T. Barry's building was occupied by O'Brien & Gillmor as a grocery and provision store. D. Gill's building contained the Primary school and Temperance Hall, and D. Gillmor's house and barn were occupied by Alexander Milne. The fire originated in O'Neill's premises. The fire originated on the hands and his clothing scorched in efforts to save his property. O'Brien & Gillmor saved most of their goods. They had some property in the Temperance Hall was also partially insured, but there was no insurance on the other buildings. At one time the fire threatened to become general. The residences of H. J. Gillmor, James O'Neill, M. Parks, J. Kolman, J. Frawley and the Baptist meeting house were all on fire at one period, but by almost superhuman efforts the flames were kept within the cluster of buildings at the corner of Main and Brunswick streets. John O'Neill's furniture, and Mr. Milne's household goods were much injured. St. George has never had so serious a fire, and it only narrowly escaped a general conflagration.

As the town has no fire engine, too much credit cannot be given to those who worked so effectively to stay the progress of the flames. The entire contents of the post office and telegraph office were destroyed. The loss is estimated at not less than $10,000.

Two men digging a drain in rear of Leonard Bros.' plumbing establishment, Hollis street, unearthed the decayed bones of a human being, and whether man or woman, none could tell.

They were found about fifteen inches below the surface, and from appearances belonged to a person about six feet in height. There was nothing to show that the body had been buried in any way, it being buried, but it had evidently been there for many years, perhaps half a century. The first evidence of bones was when a shovel was picked up and crashed into the skull and brought it to the surface. Then the bones of the forehead, ribs and limbs were found at regular intervals, the head rising to the east.—Hants Chronicle.
