- THE FOLLOWING timely suggestions from the ongregationalist deserve the consideration of pastors who wish the largest success. They should, it says, especially at this season of the year, "Aim at results and be content with nothing short of definite achievements. The unconverted ought to be led to acknowledge their allegiance to Christ. Christians should be brought to a recognition of the necessity of more fervent Bible study; more zealous habits of prayer; more effective benevolence; better balanced lives and more Christlike dispositions. It is never justifiable to aim in the air, but least of all is anything pardonable at this season that does not strike for results.'
