THE LAST HYMN

The Sabbath-day was ending In a village by the sea ; The uttered benediction Touched the people tenderly. And they rose to face the sunset In the glowing, lighted west, And then hastened to their dwellings, For God's blessed boon of rest.

But they looked across the waters, And a storm was raging there; A fierce spirit moved above them, The wild spirit of the air. And it lashed and shook and tore them. Till they thundered, groaned, and boomed, And alas! for any vessel

In their yawning gulfs entombed. Very anxious were the people On that rocky coast of Wales, Lest the dawn of coming morrows Should be telling awful tales. When the sea had spent its passion

And should cast upon the shore Bits of wreck and swollen victims, As it had done heretofore. With the rough winds blowing round her,

A brave woman strained her eyes, And she saw along the billows A large vessel fall and rise. Oh! it did not need a prophet To tell what th' end must be,

For no ship could ride in safety Near the shore on such a sea. Then pitying people hurried From their homes and thronged the beach. Oh! for power to cross the water

And the perishing to reach. Helpless hands were wrung for sorrow, Tender hands grew cold with dread. And the ship, urged by the tempest, To the fatal rock-shore sped.

"She has parted in the middle! Oh! the half of her goes down! God have mercy! Oh! is heaven Far to seek for those who drown?" Lo! when next the white, shocked faces

Looked with terror on the sea, Only one last clinging figure On the spar was seen to be. And near the trembling watchers Came the wreck, tossed by the wave

And the man still clung and floated, Though no power on earth could save. "Could we send him a short message?" Here's a trumpet. Shout away ! 'T was the preacher's hand that took it, And he wondered what to say. Any memory of his sermon-

Firstly, secondly ? Ah! no! There was but one thing to utter In the awful hour of woe. So he shouted through the trumpet "Look to Jesus! Can you hear?"

And "Ay, ay, sir!" rang the answer O'er the waters, loud and clear. Then they listened. He is singing "Jesus, lover of my soul!"

And the winds brought back the echo, "While the nearer waters roll." Strange, indeed, it was to hear him. " Till the storm of life was past," Singing bravely from the waters, "Oh! receive my soul at last!"

He could have no other refuge, " Hangs my helpless soul on thee : " " Leave, ah! leave me not"-The singer Dropped at last into the sea; And the watchers, looking homeward Through their eyes with tears made dim, Said: "He passed to be with Jesus In the singing of that hymn."

MOTHER'S BOYS.

Yes I know there are stains on my carpet, The traces of small muddy boots; And I see your fair tapestry glowing, All spotless with blossoms and fruits.

And I know that my walls are disfigured With prints of small fingers and hands; And that your own household most truly In immaculate purity stand.

And I know that my parlor is littered With many odd treasures and toys; While your own is in daintiest order, Unharmed by the presence of boys And I know that my room is invaded

Quite boldly all hours of the day; While you sit in yours unmolested And dream the soft quiet away ! Yes, I know there are four little bedsides

Where I must stand watchful each night While you go out in your carriage, And flash in your dresses so bright.

Now I think I'm a neat little woman; I like my house orderly too; And I'm fond of all dainty belongings; Yet I would not change places with you.

No! keep your fair home with its order. Its freedom from bother and noise; And keep your own fanciful leisure But give me my four splendid boys!

A CROOKED DAY.

It was a lovely day in mid-winter. Not a cloud was to be seen overhead, nor could a speck of dust be detected upon the streets, as a heavy rain had washed them clean the night before. Even the little sparrows appeared to be happier than usual as they twittered on the edge of the roof. Now, when all nature seemed so lovely, is it not strange that Abby should feel that it was a crooked day? See if you can find a reason that does not seem known to

The night before this day, at half-past eight, which was her usual hour to go to bed, her mother had said to her, " Come, darling, time to go up stairs now. Hark! the clock is striking the half

"Yes, mother," Abby said, "in one moment." "Abby!" The mother's voice was full of grief because her little daughter did not obey at once.

"Abby ! "Yes, mother dear; do excuse me, the story was so nice, and I was just at a part where I could not bear to leave it!"

"That is no excuse for not obeying. Go now, without any discussion; take your book and put it into your case. See, you have lost fifteen minutes of sleep.'

Abby bade her mother good-night, and went to her room. Before putting away the book, she opened it just for a peep, which was all wrong. Probably she did not intend to read any, but when one yields to temptation, it seems very easy to quiet onscience. Thus, she reasoned with herself, that if she was unfastening the buttons of her shoes as she read, there could not be any harm in it. Then, as she unbraided her hair, she glanced over a few lines more; but presently hair and shoes were forgotten, and she was completely absorbed in the story-book. And so much so, that she was only aroused by the striking of the town-clock. Ter o'clock! what would her dear mother say? As she laid her head upon her pillow she felt very unhappy; but she decided that she would not tell her mother

Morning came, and Abby was so sleepy and cross that she would not get up until she had been called several times. Even when she was up, she would not make any haste, so that she was late at breakfast, to which she went without a word of thanks to Him who had kept her through the night. Her tardiness displeased her father, who told her she must retire a half hour earlier than usual.

School-time arrived; her hat had to be looked up, her mittens were missing, and she felt her books continually slipping because she had mislaid her strap. In school she was not much better off; the hour that she had lost in the morning would have helped her to look over her lessons instead of having her mind filled with the story-book.

Even when she returned home, things went no better. Jamie wanted her pet doll, and when she impatiently struck his baby hands, she saw the bed. — Detroit Press.

So the day wore on, until night came, and then, before she went to sleep, she had to talk it all out with her mother. When she made her confession

" Mother, what has been the matter with the day? It has been the longest day of my life, and such a very crooked one."

"It is very easy for me to see where the fault lies. Can you not see it also?" "I know, dear mother, that I was very naughty

A WARNING.

When I read the drunkard's doom Within God's book revealed-How 'mid despair and awful gloom His fate is surely sealed-I humbly crave His constant care

To guide me day by day. That shunning every tempting snare, My feet may never stray.

I'll touch not, taste not, handle not, Nor look upon the wine, Lest after death the drunkard's lot Of infamy be mine.

So when the wicked from thy face And from thy kingdom flee, Among the trophies of thy grace, Dear Lord, remember me.

THE TOUCH OF NATURE.

A boy, ten years old, pulling a heavy cart loaded with pieces of boards and laths taken from some emolished structure-an every-day sight in our arge cities. Tired and exhausted, he halted under a shade tree. His feet were sore and bruised, his clothes in rags, his face pinched and looking years older than it should. The boy lay down on the grass and in five minutes was asleep. His bare feet just touched the curb stone, and his old hat fell from his head and fell on the walk. In the shadow of the tree, his face told a story that every passer-by could read. It told of scanty food, of nights when the body shivered with cold, of a home without sunshine, of a young life confronted by mocking shadows.

Then something curious happened. A laboring man-a queer old man with a wood-saw on his arm -crossed the street to rest for a moment beneath the same shade. He glanced at the boy and then turned away, but his look was drawn again, and now he saw the picture and read the story. He, too, knew what it was to shiver and hunger. He tip-toed along until he could bend over the boy, and then he took from his pocket a piece of bread and meat-the dinner he was to eat if he found work-and laid it down beside the lad. Then he walked carelessly away, looking back every moment, but keeping out of sight, as he wanted to escape thanks.

Men, women and children had seen it all, and what a leveller it was! The human soul is kind and generous, but sometimes there is need of a key o open it. A man walked down from his steps and left a half dollar beside the poor man's bread. A woman went down and left a good hat in the place of the old one. A child came with a pair of shoes. and a boy with a coat and vest. Pedestrians halted and whispered and dropped dimes and quarters be. side the first silver piece. The pinched-faced boy suddenly awoke, and sprang up as if it were a crime

He saw the bread, the clothing, the money, the score of people waiting around to see what he would do. He knew that he had slept, and realized that all these things had come to him as he dreamed. Then what did he do? Why, he sat down and covered his face with his hands and sob-

A LITTLE HERO.

There are many adult Christians who have not the courage displayed by little Charlie. Here is what he did

Charlie was going home with his uncle. They were on the steamboat all night. A steamboat is urnished with little beds on each side of the cabin These little beds are called berths. When it was time to go to bed Charlie undressed himself " Make haste and jump into your berth, boy," cried his uncle.

"Mayn't I first kneel down and ask God to take care of us?" asked Charlie. "We shall be taken care of fast enough," said

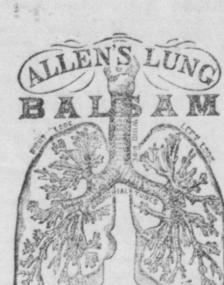

"Yes, sir," said Charlie, "but mother always tells us not to take any thing without first asking." Uncle Tom had nothing to say to that; and Charlie knelt down, just as he did by his own little bed at home.
