

THE RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCER.

TERMS AND NOTICES.

THE RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCER is published weekly, from the office of BARNES & CO., Prince St., Street St. John, N. B.

Terms: $2.00 a year, in advance.

All exchanges should be addressed, RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCER, Fredericton, N. B.

All communications for insertion should be addressed, REV. JOSEPH MCLEOD, P. O. Box 351, Fredericton, N. B.

THE RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCER.

REV. JOSEPH MCLEOD, EDITOR.
SAINT JOHN, N. B., JULY 4, 1884.

SOUND ADVICE is that given by the Presbyterian when it says, " Whenever a man finds himself in a place where he cannot teach what he believes to be important truth, let him give up the place and hold on to the truth. Let him lose his honors and save his manhood."

GREAT is the responsibility of mothers. John Randolph once said, " I should have been an atheist if it had not been for one recollection—and that was the memory of the time when my departed mother used to take my little hands in hers, and taught me to say, ' Our Father, who art in heaven! '

— THIS is fire-cracker and spread-eagle-speech-making day in the United States. The small boy will have a good time, and the Independence day orators will feel themselves the most important men in the world, and will talk about whipping all the world generally, and England in particular. It amuses them and hurts nobody.

A GENTLEMAN, who is one of a committee to procure pulp supply in a New England Church, says that there has been a great advance in the style of the preaching of the young men from the Theological Seminaries. His observation is that formerly the young men came from the Seminaries with theological dispositions, but now with earnest, practical Gospel. For the last ten years this is the desideratum. It is also suggestive that this class of young men are in demand.

IT is a great mistake for a minister to allow himself to be tempted into seeking a larger field, just because it is larger. If there be a " thus saith the Lord " it is well. The Advocate quotes Dr. John Hall as saying that the only way to get a larger field, if one desired it, was to be conspicuously effective in a small one. The great thing to be desired is not a larger area or a wider scope, but more thoroughness, and efficiency, and faithfulness in the place where we are. The promise is to him who is faithful over a few things. How many of us can look up into the face of the Master and say we are ready, according to this test, to be ruler over many.

— REFERING to the exactions of Society, and the readiness with which professing Christians submit to them, the India Witness makes the following pertinent remark.— " Ordinary Christians utterly refuse to do for Christ what they cheerfully perform for Society. They will go to an evening party at half-past nine without murmur and return home at midnight with absolute satisfaction, but they refuse to attend a religious meeting which interferes with either dinner or sleep. If the Christians would only serve their Master with one-half the zeal which the children of the world display in the service of their Master, the Empire would soon be revolutionized."

WE HAVE frequently asked and even urged the ministers generally to contribute freely to the columns of the INTELLIGENCER. They might treat a great variety of subjects in an interesting manner, and greatly to the benefit of the churches. The Guardian puts the matter thus: " There are many who, unless they have something in which they are personally interested, do, write a line for the privilege of speaking through the paper to so large an audience. It may be a means of great good to others. If you have obtained light on some portion of Scripture, or some practical thought with regard to the best way of advancing the Kingdom of God, write it out and send it on. It may quicken and help others. It must be that ministers in their pastoral work, and in revival services, learn many incidents of Christian experience that would do other good. They may be published in a way that will not point out the person concerned, or give any offence."

IT is periodically intimated that the Pope will soon leave Rome and seek a home elsewhere. The impression sought to be given to the great body of " the faithful " is that he is very badly used by the Italian Government, and that Rome is becoming unbearable. It is hardly probable that there is any serious intention whatever to change his quarters, the talk about it being merely to keep the sympathies and contributions of his flock active. But assuming the possibility of his removal, a correspondent of the New York Sun writes as follows:

" Where could he go? He could not go to France, where the Radical Government exiles monks and nuns, makes laws antagonistic to the church, and irritates the Pope to the daily annoyances of the Concordat. He could not go to Austria, because though the personal sympathy of the Emperor might encourage him, the Government is no better than the French or the Italian. Spain is unsettled and torn, and would prevent Alfonso from offering to Leo XIII. as his successor. Malta is strong, but that could not be. The Pope do on that rock in the middle of the sea? He would find a good opportunity to practice his charity among the innumerable beggars; but it would be very difficult for him, even protected by her Majesty's troops, to rule from that part of the Catholic church. If Malta is no good, Trieste is worse. The Irredentists want to annex that island to the Papal States, and it would be a guest of Bisanzio. The Sun writes as follows:

— The Supreme Court, during its late session, for the County of York, decided a liquor case, which, if sustained by the full Bench, will be likely to reduce the liquor traffic in the future, where the Scott Act is in operation, to a strictly cash transaction.

It was developed in the case of Furlong vs. Russell. Mr. Furlong, of this city, it seems had sold to one Russell, of the City of Fredericton, a quantity of liquors, knowing at the time that the liquors were destined for illicit sale in the City of Fredericton, which is under the Canadian Temperance Act. The liquors were sold on credit, and the action was brought to recover the cost of the same from Russell. Russell's lawyer took the point that, inasmuch as the liquors were destined for sale in a place where such sale was forbidden by law, and as the plaintiff knew that such was the destination of the liquor, the plaintiff thereby made himself a confederate with Russell for the purpose of violating the law of the land, and as such could not recover. The Judge charged the Jury in strict accordance with the line of argument made by the counsel, and the Jury gave a verdict for the defendant.

This furnished another argument, if such were required, why the friends of temperance will not allow the rum party to obtain, by a vote, the repeal of the Act in York County. Under that Act liquor can be neither legally sold in the County, nor legally purchased to be sold. The friends of temperance knowing this should see to it that the Act is sustained.

— MATTILDA MACDONALD, a child about twelve years old, was found on the bank of the river opposite Blaine's factory, in an unconscious position, intoxicated, by Mrs. Belyea, last Sunday afternoon. Pollicino Wright was not called. Dr. Currie, by whose orders she was removed to her home on King street, where after several hours, the doctor succeeded in bringing her back to consciousness. The doctor said if she had laid there half an hour she would not have been saved. A few minutes before the occurrence, she was seen to pass Belyea's with a Mrs. Collins, who also appeared intoxicated.

The above appears in one of the Fredericton journals of last week. It appears from an examination of the case some wretch who had illegally come in possession of a bottle of alcoholic liquors was guilty of giving this girl and others portions of it. We are not aware of the reason why a man who would be guilty of such an act should not be punished.

It surely is the duty of some person to protect Society from such miscreants. The rum party are now seeking to remove the bonds of the C. T. Act in York County, by a re-vote, which they are seeking to bring on. We understand they claim a partial contribution to the Fund is so small that it cannot be burdensome to anybody, while the aggregate, if all contribute, would be a sum which might be made to accomplish great good. We trust that more general and careful attention than ever before will be given to the collection of the Fund this year.

Our chief object in this writing now is to call attention to the change in the time of payment and the person to whom payment is made by the revision of the Constitution at last Conference. Heretofore it has been the custom of churches to send the Fund direct to the Treasurer of Conference at the session of that body. He was thereby kept altogether too busy, and prevented from participating in the discussions and other business of Conference, besides being made late in submitting his Report, which, even at the latest, would be necessarily incomplete.

To relieve the Conference Treasurer and keep the work of District Meetings and Conference as much apart as they should be, it is required that hereafter the churches send their Conference Fund contributions to the Treasurers of their respective District Meetings at or before said meetings. It is very desirable that this rule be carefully observed. The following is the by-law:

ART. 14.—Every church of the Conference is expected to pay annually a sum equal to the amount received for the collection of its members into the General Conference Fund, which shall be given to the deacons of such churches to be sent to the collection and forwarding the same to the Treasurers of their respective District Meetings, at or before the annual session thereof.

CONFERENCE FUND.

We do not need to explain to the churches what the Conference Fund is, how it is made up, nor the purpose for which it is used. It is a thing of long standing that they all know all about it.

The fact, however, that comparatively few contribute towards it would seem to warrant us in urging that more general attention be given to it.

The by-laws make it the duty of the deacons of the churches to attend to it. Will the deacons please make a note of this fact, and then be careful to discharge their duty in the matter. The individual contribution to the Fund is so small that it would be burdensome to anybody, while the aggregate, if all contribute, would be a sum which might be made to accomplish great good. We trust that more general and careful attention than ever before will be given to the collection of the Fund this year.

A touching incident occurred one evening. A fine young man, accompanied by his mother, was brought into the private vestry to sign the pledge, the mother watching nervously, with mingled anxiety and joy, as he put the pen to paper. He was then asked to join in prayer to God for strength and help, but said he was " too black." Falling in her persuasions, the good woman knelt down herself, and with tears besought the Lord to have her son. He seemed much moved; and a friend, taking him hand, said, " Well, my brother, won't you start now tonight? " " Brother! " he exclaimed; do you grasp my hand as a brother? " Yes, certainly, I do. " Then God bless you; there is hope for me yet, and by his grace I will live to serve him! " A bright smile lit up his face as he left, and his godly mother said, " He is my eldest son, and a child of many prayers. God has given me great joy tonight; these are not tears of sorrow, but tears of gratitude to him.

A man was one day using foul language in a train, when a fellow passenger advised him to " go and have a word with Moody. " " No I, " said he, " I've been once, but never again. Why, he made me stand up, and told me to be a man! " " Then God bless you; there is hope for me yet, and by his grace I will live to serve him! " A bright smile lit up his face as he left, and his godly mother said, " He is my eldest son, and a child of many prayers. God has given me great joy tonight; these are not tears of sorrow, but tears of gratitude to him.

On Friday afternoon Mr. Moody spoke about " Heaven " at the close of the address over eighty signed their desire to seek the better and heavenly country. His address was followed, as on the preceding Friday, by a prayer-meeting for " our children," and it was very touching to hear the names of the young ones who had given their Treasures to the respective District Meetings, at or before the annual session thereof.

VOTING FOR A PRESIDENT.

MR. EDITOR:—I have noticed your pleasant remarks about the nomination of Mr. Blaine and of the pending election, and it has occurred to me to say a few things about our peculiar way of voting for a President and Vice-President of the United States.

In direct voting, the name of our favorite is written or printed on the ballot which we deposit in the ballot-box, so we vote for Governors and of members of the lower house of Congress. Senators to Congress are elected by the Legislatures of the respective States.

But we vote only indirectly for President and Vice-President, that is, we vote for a set of persons called electors, to vote for President and Vice-President for us.

Each State has two Senators, and three counted with the member or members of the lower house make up the number of electors which each State is entitled respectively to elect. Thus the State of Delaware has one representative and two Senators, that is three, and three is the number of electors Delaware is entitled to elect (or appoint by Legislature). New York has two Senators and thirty-four representatives, and so has right to elect thirty-six electors.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and the next day, and so on, until a majority is reached.

These electors must not be Congressmen, nor others holding offices of profit or trust under the United States Government. When they are elected upon a given day the electors meet at the Capital of their respective States and vote and seal their votes sealed to the Vice-President of the United States. On a given day these votes are counted in presence of both Houses of Congress. If there is a majority vote for any candidate he is elected. If there is not a majority of electoral votes for any candidate the House of Representatives votes for the next day, and the Senate votes for the next day, and