THE RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCER.

plot, because bearing his voice in prayer, they judged that he was conversing with friends gathered there for his defense.

In his appearance before the Geographical Society in New York on the "Nomenclature of Cities and Towns in the United States," Mr. David Dudley Field quoted the following from a David guide as illustrations of the recklessness naming of American towns: You Bet, Pop Corn, Wild Cat, Cut Off, Big Cow, Toad Vine, Black Jack, Skunk Lake, Broken Road, Cat Creek, Dirt Town, Doctor Town, Jug Tavern, Cow Skin, and Cut Off.

AMONG OUR EXCHANGES.

(Central Advocate.)

Mr. Moore has not only been a boy himself, but he has not forgotten what kind of a boy he was; for, we suspect, he was thinking of himself in the following: "The ugly age of a boy is from fifteen to eighteen. He knows more than his father and grandfather know now, and less than they will ever know again. We ought to look very closely after boys from fifteen to eighteen. They then need all the help we can give them."

HERAT.

(Persian Witness.)

This name is likely to attract attention for some time to come. It is a fortified city in Western Afghanistan, near the Hury or Herri-roo river, 360 miles west of Cabool and 200 miles south-east of Meshad (or Meshad), now in possession of Russia. Herat is the capital of the great empire ruled by the King of Timour: Persia has been eager to seize it. So has Russia. England wants it to continue under Afghan control. England cannot allow it to pass under Russian hands. Its present population is about 30,000.

WORSE THAN THE NOVEL.

(Morning Star.)

The advertisements of objectionable books and the descriptions of low vice published by the secular papers is a glaring evil. There are comparatively few sacred papers which would be committed to the reading of the young. The review column notices books which none should recommend is not noted simply to be denounced, but is often given in sickening detail, to the disgust of even the most reader. These are given with capital headings, as if they were of capital importance, if, whatever else is overlooked, these shall not be.

The Persiatic Act was carried by an immense majority. Of 1163 votes polled there, 978 were in favor of the Act.
