Second Quarter-Lesson 111-April 17 JOSEPH MAKES HIMSELF KNOWN .-GEN. 45:1-15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Overcome evil with good.—Rom. 12:21. The years or plenty came, Joseph had foretold Pharaoh. Then followed the years of famine, which extended beyond the boundaries of Egypt. In the second year the famine was so great that Jacob felt the necessity of sending to Egypt for grain for food.

Joseph's Ten Brethren go down INTO EGYPT FOR FOOD. The story is so familiar, and so fully told in Gen. 42, that it need not be repeated. We would only note, first, the bitter memories associated with Egypt. A word will bring up memories of a life-time. If you had met the oldest, strongest, sturdiest of them in a dark night and said to him," Egypt!" you would have struck him as with the lightning of God. It is a terrible thing to have done

Why did not Joseph's brethren recognize him, while he immediately recognized them? The change in appearance was much less in them than in him. They were in the shepherd dress in which he knew them. They had no expectation of seeing him in such a position. Joseph's name had been changed.

love. Jesus expresses his love to us. He loads us with kindness. He rejoices with us. We talk with him now as a friend, and walk in sweet and loving communion.

PRACTICAL HINTS. The evil results of sin set out the guilt in blacker colors, and awaken the conscience. Much of the punishment of all sin is future punishment Joseph's brethren were suffering for sins committed 22 years before.

Those who have done wrong must expect to be tested and proved before they are received back into friendship and trust.

The only way to overcome evil is by good. There is great comfort and encouragement in the assurance that God overrules all things. He does not destroy men's free will, but uses men's actions. "The Lord reigneth" is the hope of the world. We see, in the actions of Joseph to his brothers, a type of our Elder Brother. In his dealings with us. We have sinned, and ill-treated him, but he forgives us, he yearns over us, he invites us to his tables of plenty, he communes with us, he brings us into his kingdom.

A Girl's Work.

Several years ago a young gir. took a class of boys in a certain Sunday school. She was very young had never taught, and therefore shrank from the work; but with that instinctive sagacity which boys often show, they chose her, and persisted in their choice; and so, very doubtfully, she began her work. There were ten boys in the class, and they lived in a town of four or which boasts of forty drinking any right to the lemonade because saloons: They were not the good teacher, and a strong class spirit was soon developed, of which our slender girl did not fail to take advantage. She encouraged them to stand together, and she stood among them. and she was the hearty sympathetic useful life hers must prove to be, adviser and personal friend of each.

TRUE POLITENESS.

One warm day last summer at a pienic, a group of warm and tired children rushed to the platform in great delight at the call,

'This way for lemonade." A beautiful little girl whose winning face would make it a marked one anywhere, had just accepted a glass of the refreshing beverage and was about to raise it to her lips when she noticed a pale-faced child pleadingly regarding her. Another moment and the child had drained the glass; and passing it back said, gratefully, "I am very much obliged; you are so very kind.'

"Not so very kind," muttered a spiteful girl to her companion, probably Edna Brooks expects she'll get another glass of lemonade for herself." But Edna had no such anticipation. She had heard the gentleman who was dipping the lemonade say, "Only one glass around." She returned the empty glass and went off with a young friend, wiping the perspiration from her sweet face. As they walked off, these remarks in low voices were distinctly heard:

"You are a queer girl, Edna Brooks; very queer."

"Why "

"To go without your lemonade for a girl who had no right to any. She doesn't belong to our school and never did; besides, you had just said you were so thirsty you could hardly wait for a drink.

"I was thirsty and still am, answered the sweet-voiced girl with a bright smile; "but you don't take into consideration that the poor little girl was thirsty too, and though as you say she didn't have sure she had a right because she had a sort of cordial liking for their belongs to Him.
