Do it Now.

There is work for one and all, Do it now. Hear the Master to the call, l'o it now.

Lead the young, the weak, the old; Woo the strong, the brave, the bold, To the tender Shepherd's fold-Do it now.

Can you help an erring one? Do it now. Stay not for "to-morrow's sun." Do it now. Bid them leave the paths of sin, And a better life begin;

If some wanderer you can win--

Do it now.

If for Jesus you can speak, Do it now. Though your tones are low and weak,

Do it now. Take the tempted by the hand, Point them to the better land That awaits "beyond the strand"-Do it yow, Bid them trust in Jesus' power, Do it now. Flee to him this very hour,

Do it now. Tell them that his life he gave Us from endless wrath to save, Gained the victory o'er the grave-Do it now.

What did you learn today?' asked the mother of her bright boy. O, mamma, such lots of things the teacher told us,' he answered. 'She told about a man who preached so long that people went to sleep, and one of them fell out of the window and broke his neck, and they went and gathered up the fragments, and there were twelve baskets full! Ard—and—they fed them to a herd of swine, and they ran violently.' Now, the trouble in this case was that the teacher, instead of confining herself to a clear statement of one Scripture incident, related to her pupils three different narratives. The result was that those who remembered at all what she said carried home in their brains a confused jumble of her stories. The child's epetition of them, as here given, is not at all overdrawn, but is just such an account as a bright child, intent upon what the teacher said, but unable to hold each narrative in separate form, would give of what the teacher taught him. The illustration shows forcibly the importance of presenting to the younger children only a few single ideas in any one lesson, and those ideas centered closely about one main subject .- Bible Teacher.
