Mutual Help. One day a blind man chanced to meet a lame one, limping in the street.

The lame man cried, "Lend aid to thee? I cannot walk, unhappy me! And yet, methinks, to bear a load, Thou hast good shoulders strong and broad."

"If thou'lt resolve to bear me hence, I'll be thy guide as recompense; Thy firm strong foot will then be mine, And my bright eye be also thine!"

The lame man with his crutches rode; Upon the blind man's shoulders broad; United, thus achieved the pair What each would have accomplished ne'er.

The Sabbath-School. INTERNATIONAL LESSONS. Second Quarter—Lesson III.—April 15. CHRISTIAN WATCHFULNESS.—Matt. 24: 42-51.

THE DUTY OF WATCHING.—Ver. 42. Watch therefore. Watch, both in the Greek and in the English, is closely allied to wake.

There will be a coming of Christ, in visible presence, at the time of the judgment and resurrection. Practically the Lord cometh to each of us in every great crisis of our lives, but especially in the hour of death.

THE DUTY ILLUSTRATED BY ONE WATCHING AGAINST ROBBERS.—Vers. 43, 44. But know this. The idea is the same in either case: Ye do not know the day of Christ's coming; but ye know the duty and the necessity of constant watchfulness in worldly affairs.

ILLUSTRATED BY A FAITHFUL SERVANT.—Vers. 45-47. Who then is a faithful and wise servant? or steward, who was generally a slave whom his master had chosen on account of his trustworthiness and intelligence.

ILLUSTRATED BY THE UNFAITHFUL SERVANT.—Vers. 48-51. If that evil servant shall say in his heart. He would be ashamed to say it openly. But the wickedness of the heart soon manifests itself in the conduct.

How To Rear Children. Children cannot be reared by rules, but the following may be suggestive: One great point is to treat them kindly.

Manly Boys. I am by no means an old man, but I have lived long enough to be thankful that I was one of the boys of whom rude boys speak of as "led by mother's apron strings."

evil servant shall say in his heart. He would be ashamed to say it openly. But the wickedness of the heart soon manifests itself in the conduct.

And shall begin to smite his fellow servants: not only neglecting their interest, but actually abusing them. He abuses where he should give nourishment.

The lord of that servant. Christ is still "lord" of the unfaithful and sinful servant. Shall come. Doubt of his coming does not hinder it.

And shall [cut him] asunder: literally, shall cut him in two. A terrific form of capital punishment, carried sometimes into execution with a saw.

And appoint him his portion with the hypocrites. He must go with the hypocrites because he is one. Each to his own place. There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.

It is of the utmost importance to be always watching and ready. We are to watch against sudden temptations, against influences to evil, against unfaithfulness, against a wrong spirit, against pride, against all the wiles of the devil.

The true way to watch is to do every duty faithfully. The only way to promotion is through faithful service in lesser things.

Every person at last must go to his own place and his own rewards. The punishment of the wicked is final and terrible.

I have made up my mind to speak to you about a little matter, for I believe you want to do what is fair. Now, when the girls study just the same books you do, and often go far ahead of you at school;

Children cannot be reared by rules, but the following may be suggestive: One great point is to treat them kindly. Do not preach politeness and propriety to them, and violate their laws yourself.

Never quarrel nor have any unpleasantness between yourselves, or with others, in their presence. If you must quarrel, wait till the children are gone to bed.

Never speak flippantly of neighbors before children. They may meet the neighbors' children and talk about it.

If those be blessed who die in Christ, what must they be who die for Christ? In some forms of headache, a towel or a napkin, wrung out of hot water as hot as can be borne, and wound around the head, affords relief.

he could coax her to let him do, and the two younger ones followed his example right along. Those boys never wasted their mother's money on tobacco, beer or cards.

They kept at work and found any amount of pleasure in it. They were happy, jolly boys, too, full of fun, and everybody not only liked, but respected and admired them.

I tell you, boys who are good to their mother and to their sisters in the house, always grow up to be nice men. Now I'm not blaming you boys, nor anybody else.

I am by no means an old man, but I have lived long enough to be thankful that I was one of the boys of whom rude boys speak of as "led by mother's apron strings."

I was reared in a large city, and in a neighborhood where there were a large number of boys. Many of these seemed to have or to take their own way; a few of us were kept under control.

And although thus nicknamed, many of them were strong enough to withstand the temptations of the camp, and to endure severe hardships, and brave enough to fall on the field of battle with the face to the foe.

Children cannot be reared by rules, but the following may be suggestive: One great point is to treat them kindly.

Do not preach politeness and propriety to them, and violate their laws yourself. In other words, let the example you set them be a good one.
