A Spring Chorus.

Oh, such a commotion under the ground When March called, "Ho there! ho!" Such spreading of rootlets far and wide, Such whispering to and fro! And, "Are you ready?" the Snow-drop asked;

"'Tis time to start, you know." "Almost, my dear," the Willow replied. "I'll follow as soon as you go." Ther "Ha! ha! ha!" a chorus came Of laughter soft and low, ground,-Yes, millions beginning to grow.

"I'll promise my blossoms," the Crocus

"When I hear the bluebirds sing." "And straight thereafter," Narcissus cried. "My silver and gold I'll bring." "And ere they are dulled," another spoke

"My Hyacinth bells shall ring." And the Violet only murmured, "I'm here." And sweet grew the hour of spring. Then, "Ha! ha! ha!" a chorus came Of laughter soft and low,

From the millions of flowers under the ground,-

Yes, millions, beginning to grow.

The Secret Society.

BY MISS CARRIE M. GILBERT.

Aunt Jessie had come for a visit. his drum, Jamie tooted his tin horn, and little Prue blew frantically on an old mouth organ, while to their inexpressible delight the fire engine and hose company just then flew by to a

"Didn't you have a glorious reception, Aunt Jessie?" cried Joe.

"Didn't it seem most like Fourth of July, though?" exclaimed Jamie.

stopping to kiss sweet little Prue for the third or fourth time, "and now what shall we do while I am here? shall stay a whole week."

"O tell us, you know something," the boys chorused.

"Something new," added Joe. "How would you like to have a secret society?" "Oh, oh, a real secret society like the Masons and Odd Fellows! How splendid!" cried Joe. "Will we have a password and grip?" asked Jamie with his eyes very

"Me too, had grip, Aunt Jessie," cried little Prue.

"Oh, she means La Grippe," ex plained Joe and they all laughed. "Let's lock the door and begin now," suggested Joe. That evening at the tea table, Aunt Jessie announced that a secret society with a secret purpose had been formed and that in a week papa and mamma might have an opportunity to guess this purpose. "And if you guess right, we'll tell you the password and grip too," said Joe and Jamie. Then the most wonderful things began to happen in that house!

The first morning mamma went into the sitting-room to find some bats, or balls, or blocks to put away, but she could not find one, until she looked in the closet where they were all lying in beautiful rows.

She looked under chairs and tables for a cap, or a coat, or a handkerchief, but not one could she find. Then she went to her stocking basket and there was every stocking neatly mended!

Then she went out doors to weed the flower bed under the south window, and not a weed could she find! And she really had to go in the house and read the last new book until Aunt Jessie and the children came back from their drive.

The next night papa came home to find the yard neatly raked. He spoke about it at the tea table and mamma asked him if he had seen any brownies about. Said she, "I have not seen them yet, but I am sure they are here." They both looked very grave, but Jamie and Joe were obliged to eat fast to keep from laughing.

"Do you suppose she really thinks it's brownies?" whispered Jamie to Aunt Jessie.

The next morning mamma rose task. You don't seem to comprehend early and went softy down stairs to see that the table was set properly and and a bowl of roses in the centre. She peeped out and was almost sure that she saw two brownies on the porch sweeping up a litter of rose Besetting Sins.

Alice Gray leaned over the fire, her chin resting in her hands and a pensive look in her brown eyes. It was Sunday, and that morning in church she had listened to Mr. Bentley's sermon with rather a curious interest as he spoke of the "sin which doth so easily beset us." Now she was quietly wondering what could be her own besetting sin.

"it is not ill-temper; and it cannot be acting deceitfully, and speaking horrid untruths; for I should despise myself if I did that. I don't hate anybody, or take what does not belong to me, and no one can say that I"-

"Alice," called Aunt Mary, gently, from her seat in the adjoining room, As the carriage drove up, Joe beat | "if you have firished with my pencil will you get it for me? I need it for a few moments."

"Why, Aunt Mary! did not I return it yesterday?" began the girl, when catching herself up, she said hastily: "Oh, I remember. I was in a hurry, so I just slipped it into my pocket when I was in Kitty Blake's. I will run and get it."

But in a short time Alice walked "Yes, indeed," said Aunt Jessie, into the room with a face which was very long indeed. The gold pencil, which she knew her aunt prized highly, was gone from her pocket-lost probably, on the way to her friend's house.

"O, my child! Why did you not give it to me as soon as you had finished? You would then have saved all this trouble," exclaimed Aunt Mary, trying not to be too severe on her little niece, who looked rather penitent, though she only said, as many little girls have said before: "I did not think."

While she stood with downcast eyes, clasping and unclasping her fingers, her father walked into the room, saying, with the air of one who expects a satisfactory answer . "Alice, did you mail my letter yesterday?"

"Oh!" and Alice's heart gave a great thump." "Papa, I forgot it!"

Mr. Gray stopped in his complacent march up and down, and hastily turned to look at her. "My daughter," said he, that letter is an important one, which should have gone by all means yesterday; bring it to me at once." Papa spoke sternly and Alice quickly obeyed.

"I see, Alice, that you are not to be trusted," said Mr. Gray as he took the letter from her trembling hand.

This last bitter thrust was more than the little girl could bear, and she hastily left the room, while hot tears rained down her cheeks; for we are never so unhappy as when we have no one but ourselves to blame as the cause of our trouble. It was not many days later that Alice met with a trial, which cost her a great many sighs. A brother travelling abroad had sent her as a gift a beautiful lace handkerchief, which was the pride of her heart. This she carried into the parlor to exhibit to some friends, and after the handkerchief had been duly admired, it was placed on the corner of a table. Of course nobody could explain just how it came about, but an ink bottle, which had been placed on the table, was overturned, and the handkerchief was ruined.

"Never mind that," said the plainspoken merchant. "Only do your duty, and don't get ahead of your business, and I will see that you are not neglected."

Mancel strove on and, quick in figures, he was before many months promoted to assistant book-keeper, and then to cashier. Years passed, and he became one of the managers, and eventually one of the proprietors of the great mercantile establishment which he had entered as assistant

Now, this is a true story, and the hero of it occupies a high position today under the Government of the United States. The obstacles he overcame any poor boy may overcome. The promotion he gained any worthy lad may gain. The name he made any young man of nerve and principle and laudable ambition may make. The road to success has always rough sections in it, but they are never too rough to be surmounted by patient industry, unflinching determination, and ceaseless energy. - Homer L. Ward, in Young Life.
