Mr. McCarthy resumed the debate on the redistribution bill, and said redistribution should be done in respect to equality of representation by population. The only real justification for the act of 1882 was that it was done to equalize the population. He suggested that all constituencies 20 per cent. below the unit and 20 per cent. above might be held as excesses and need equalizing. The position of affairs required a very much more sweeping change than that proposed by the bill. ought to be good reason for changing animal. from this, which suited the best community of interest and guaranteed permanency and stability. Within the last few weeks a number of very disastrous fires have occurred in various parts of Russia, inflicting great damage and causing severe losses to the workingmen who were the princlple occupants of the buildings burned. The latest place to suffer is Potchinki, in the government of Niji-Novgorod. Fire there destroyed 310 houses. The population of the town is about 7,000. and the destruction of so many dwellings caused much misery. irregularities of representation, and severely condemned the whole bill.

Hon. Mr. Haggart defended the government measure. Mr. O Brien, who seconded Mr. McCarthy's amendment, spoke strongly against the bill. He refuted the charge of treachery which was hurled against Mr. Mc-Cartoy.

He was free to confess that the redistribution of 1882 did very little credit to the parliament that passed it. But whether it was fair or not the result was that the liberal voters got there full representation in the house. The wrong doers, if they were wrong doers, did not succeed on that occasion. It might be better to repeal the act of 1832, and go back to the old basis, but how could we do it. It might be heroic to pursue such a course as the amendment proposed, but it was not practical politics. By adhering to these constituencies as they exist to day and providing some general way for the the power of the evils which he referred to being again done.

The government proposes to have all canals deepened to fourteen feet by July first, 1894.

Hon. Mr. Bowell says there is no warrant for the statement that the government proposestoallow American fishing vessels to use Canadian canals on the same terms as our vessels.

Mr. Flint admitted that the proposed bill was not a gerrymander as far as Nova Scotia was concerned It was the principle of the bill which he obrected to.

The house then divided on McCarthy's 62 for and 109 against.
