Sam hung up his hat in the entry and went into the kitchen where his aunt was busy putting things in order for the night and fastening down the windows, but suddenly she said :

'I do s'pose it ain't cooled off a mite up in you're room yet, Sammy, so if you want to you can set here by this window a spell, if you'll promise not to go out of it, an' be sartin' sure to put it down an' turn the catch down over the top before you go to bed.'

Sam gratefully promised, and his aunt knowing that she could trust him, locked the door, put the key in her pocket and departed, for in spite of room door with a slam, and Sammy, her stern and abrupt manners she had her orphan nephew, took up the pail the experience and ready tact which made her a blessing to her suffering

The lonely boy watched her out of sight judging from the dejected way in up the lane, and thought wistfully how which he carried it, or perhaps, it was | the Lawrence boys would be out playing 'wolf' and 'hop-scotch' all through the long twilight, and wished he might be He did seem to be so unfortunate; with them; but then with a little thrill he had just broken the blue and white of pleasure he thought of the promised bowl from which his supper of bread new shoes, and there was the storybook-surely he might read a few minutes; so he ran up stairs after it, and settled himself close by the window to catch the last remnant of daydown upon him sharp words of con- light; but he had read scarcely more than two pages when the window was suddenly darkened by the figure of a

'Will you get it now, before worse happens?'

But Sam, though faint with mortal terror, shook his head decidedly, and the man, becoming desperate, took gloves; some strong cord from his pocket and tied Sam's hands behind him and then to the handle of the door, and proceeded to rummage for himself, assuring the child that if he failed to find the money and he still refused :o tell, he should certainly kill him.

Sammy's whole life of twelve years seemed to pass before him as he stood there in misery with the cord cutting into his flesh. Oh, how sweet life looked to him now-even the homely duties which that very day he had grumbled over. And dear Aunt Hannah! Would she know that he had died in defense of her beloved money? Would she be very sorry, he wondered, and would it be a dreadful expense to have a funeral and bury him? Ah, he had never been worth his salt, but had been a trouble always! He felt faint and dizzy, but these words seemed to ring in his ears, and then he was startled by a slight noise. Could the ruffian be coming back so tie; soon? and he had not found the money, of course! But-no-the sound seemed to come from outside, and a key grated in the lock.

Hours after that Sammy came to himself in a strange room, and his aunt was on her kness by his bed, sobbing and kissing his poor, swollen

When he became strong enough he was told the balance of the story. How Mr. Lawrence had seen a straggler in the vicinity that evening, and had heard rumors of late robberies, and Miss Smith, quite uneasy, had hurried home as soon as the baby was better, how Mr. Lawrence had gone with her, and they had surprised the burglar and would have captured him but for the daring leap through a second-story window, and how Sam had been released and carried over to Mr. Lawrence's house, where he and his aunt and the money were to remain over Sunday at least. All this he was told, and also that he was one of the very best and bravest and dearest boys in all the world! And Sammy has heard no allusion to salt since that eventful night .- Illustrated Christian Weekly.
