Why Mother is Proud.

Look in his face, look in his eyes, Roguish and blue and terribly wise, Roguish and blue and quick to see When mother comes in as tired as can be; Quickest to find her nicest old chair, Quickest to get to the top of the stair, Quickest to see that a kiss on the cheek Would help her far more than to chatter, to speak.

Look in her face and guess, if you can, Why mother is proud of her little man.

The mother is proud-I will tell you this; You can see it yourself in her tender kiss. But why? Well, of all her dears There is scarcely one who ever hears The moment she speaks, and jumps to see What her want or wish might be; Scarcely one. They all forget Or are not in the notion to go quite yet. But this she knows, if her boy is near, There is somebody certain to want to hear.

Mother is proud, and she holds him fast, And kisses him first and kisses him last; And he holds her hand and looks in her

And proves that he loves her whenever he

That is why she is proud of her little man.

Mr. Martin's Opportunity.

AND HOW HE IMPROVED IT.

"I have been thinking, mother,' I will be obliged to give up the paper. Things haven't gone well with us, you know, and we shall have to begin retrenching somewhere right at the beginning of the new year.

"You mean the country paper,' replied his wife, with a note of inquiry in her voice.

"Can't we manage in some way to keep this lifelong friend, father?" asked Mrs. Martin with real concern in her voice. "I can not recollect when it was not a regular visitor, first, in my father's house, and next, for nearly a score of years, in our own. If retrenchment is necessary, better let it begin somewhere else, where it will not be felt so much.

"I do not see where the retrenchment be less missed, Abby," argued Mr. Martin. "We must have sugar and coffee and tea, even if we do raise our own bread and meat, and will wear out, and shoes must be replaced, as the children cannot go barefooted."

"That is quite true; still I think for all the church paper costs, we might make an effort to deny ourselves so as to continue it," urged Mrs. Martin. "A few cents here and a few cents there would soon amount to two dollars, all it costs, though I am sure we get ten times that amount out of it in solid reading."

I am not complaining about the makeup of the paper, Abby. It is do without all kinds of presents on all well enough, so far as I can see, although I sometimes think that if religious papers were not so plenti-Bible study.

"That paper again!" said the father to himself; "I had no idea it was in such demand." Then he use all the economy possible; clothes said aloud, "There was no paper last week, or, at least, we did not get one," and then as if half ashamed of his evasion, he added, "The truth is, Tom, the times are so hard that I have had to stop the paper."

But the mother no longer took any interest in her book, but said in from the library: "Lucy is going to Sabbath school to-day because it rains, so that her teacher may be encouraged by the presence of at least one pupil. Suppose we go to the chapel for the same reason, if not for a better."

"Agreed. I never could plead cause to an empty court-room, and the minister must find it hard work to preach to empty pews."
