How He Wakened Grandmother.

Mamma said, "Little one, go and see If grandmother's ready to come to tea," I knew I musn't disturb her, so I stepped as gently along tip toe, And stood a moment to take a peep-And there was grandmother fast asleep.

I knew it was time for her to wake ; I thought I'd give her a little shake, Or tap at the door, or softly call; But I hadn't the heart for that at all-She looked so sweet and quiet there Lying back in her high arm chair. With her dear white hair, and a little smile That n eans she's loving you all the while,

I didn't make a speck of noise; I knew she was dreaming of little boys and girls who lived with her lorg ago, And then went to heaven—she had told me

I went up close and I didn't speak One word, but I gave her on the cheek The softest bit of a little kiss, Just in a whisper, and then said this; "Grandma, dear, it's time for tea."

She opened her eyes and looked at me And said, "Why pet, I just now dreamed Of a little angel who came and seemed To kiss me lovingly on my face"-She pointed right at the very place. I never told her 'twas only me, I took her hand and went to tea. -Sydney Dayre.

Waiting for the Grist.

'It is strange, said a gentleman who sat next to me in a car, and with whom I had struck up quite an acquaintance, 'what an influence a look, a word, or the little act of a perfect stranger, will sometimes have upon a person.'

'Yes, said I, 'more than any of us realize.

It was before the days of steam, and no great mills thundered on her river banks; but occasionally there was a little grist mill by the side of some small stream, and thither, whenever the water was up, the whole neighborhood flocked with their sacks of corn. The even ng was spent as usual in relating coarse jokes and playing cards. Although I was not accustomed to such things at home, I had become so used to it at the mill that it had long ceased to shock me, and indeed I was fast becoming a very interested spectator.

Johnny's Prayer.

A Christian lady had collected a lot of wild street boys into a class, and was trying to teach them, when one day she noticed that one of them had fallen asleep, and began to snore.

'He's drunk,' said his ragged companion, laughing. Of course, there was no use trying to do anything with him then, but three days afterward she saw and questioned him.

'Yes, I was drunk, that's a fact,' said Johnny, as frank as could be. 'I didn't mean to let you see me, 'cause I kind o' love yer, but I couldn't help 'Why, Johnny, you shouldn't say so. You could help it.' 'No; yer see, I've got so used to it I can't stop.'

'Oh, I am so sorry! What was it made you begin to drink?' 'I learnt it when I runned errands for Mike Dooley, down to Willard street. He keeps a liquor store, and he gives me the rum and sugar in the bottom of the glasses for my pay.' 'Johnny, it would be terrible to have you die a drunkard. I can't bear to think of it. Won't you try to give up drinking if I'll tell you how you Johnny thought a minute.

'I don't b'lieve I could ; I've got so used to't, you see. If I go without I feel so gone here,' putting his hand on his stomach. There were tears in the gentle teacher's eyes.

Johnny looked up and saw them, and was touched. He began to reconsider. 'I-I dunno but I'd try if I thought twould make you feel better.'

'God bless you, Johnny! Do you give me your hand on it, and say you will stop drinking, honest and true ?' There was a pretty long pause then.

Johnny was making a mighty effort. 'Yes'm,' he said, (and he drew a long breath,) 'I'll promise to drink no more liquor for your sake.'

'It ought to be for Jesus' sake,

'Could He make me keep my promise? You ask Him, can't you? 'Hardly sure of the boys meaning, the question was so unexpected, the kind teacher nevertheless knelt im mediately.

'Johnny knelt too, and when she had prayed, he said he guessed he would 'ask for himself.'

'Lord Jesus up in heaven, please keep a little fellow as wants to be good, and don't let him drink rum anymore, amen.'
