Ladies' Column.

WOMAN'S WORK AND AIMS.

It has been customary for a man to respond at public dinners to the time-honored toast, 'The Ladies,' but the ladies are now beginning to respond for themselves. The Baroness Burdett-Coutts did so at the recent annual dinner of the Westminster Philanthropic society, and on the same evening another lady responded to the same toast at the annual dinner of the Lambeth Outwards Association. A short time ago Miss Maryatt made an amusing speech at a banquet of the Primrose League. She bantered the gentlemen about the custom of banishing the ladies to a gallery to watch the nobler animals feeding below, and commiserated the unhappy bachelor put up to reply to 'The Ladies.' She was cheered upon saying: 'This toast is one to which you can never do more than justice, for, after all, where is there a more perfect thing in this world than a good woman? Whatever may be in store for our sex in the future—whether you admit us to many branches of science, art and honors, or even give us suffrage, and many other things from which we are now excluded—you may depend upon it that the higher the scale of duties and responsibilities to which you raise your women, the higher you will raise yourselves in the scale of civilization, and the greater number of perfect English women you will produce.'

At a reception to Miss Mitchell, the astronomer, recently given in New York, a paper was read by Mr. Frank F Wood, in which he says that once when she was in the cars between Boston and New York, the newsboy in the train eyed Miss Mitchell with evident interest. As a result of his inspection the little fellow offered Miss Mitchell none of the trashy literature he distributed to the other travellers, but presently, with an air of decision, brought her one of Mrs. Stowe's works. When she shook her head, he said: 'Scuse me, but ain't you Mrs. Stowe? Not to be baffled by her refusal to accept the name he tried to fit to her face, he presently returned to the attack, saying: 'Then perhaps you are Mrs. Stanton? Receiving a second negative, he added respectfully, Would you mind telling me who you are, ma'am? It is not probable that the name, Maria Mitchell, gave the persistent boy any definite enlightenment, but he exclaimed, triumphantly, I knew you was somebody.'

She always dresses in a quaker-like garb of black or gray, after the fashion of her ancestors. Her character is not well rounded. It has sharp and some square corners. In the ordinary meaning of the word she was not popular at Vassar, not one who entered into sympathetic relations with the students. Miss Mitchell never says an ordinary good-by, but instead invites the student to help her strip some rosebush in her garden.

She particularly dislikes show and display of all kinds, and at college would not allow visitors to her classes unless she invited them. Once President Taylor was quite nonplussed when, on entering her class-room in company with a distinguished college-guest, she said: Now, girls, I hate company, and I know you don't want to show off. So you are dismissed.

An excellent idea, and one that is steadily growing in favor, is the custom of allowing quite young girls a fixed sum for their current small expenses, permitting full liberty in the expenditure, but requiring strict accounting in a business-like form at stated periods. No better method could possibly be devised to teach the true value of money and instil correct business habits; and practical ability will not come amiss, whatever the future lot may be, whether as a wife or a member of the maiden sisterhood. Not that the matter of mere saving is so important, but the systematic habits formed in this particular will have an undoubted effect on all the other habits as well. There are a number of young ladies in New York, belonging to wealthy families, who manage property with marked ability. The father of one of these presented her, on her twenty-first birthday, with the deed of a house in the business part of the city on the condition that she would make herself thoroughly familiar with all the details connected with the care of it, and accept all the responsibilities of the management. This she did, and by her judicious supervision, founded on common sense, the income is larger from it than ever before.

Failure is often God's own tool for carving out some of the finest outlines in the character of his children; and even in this life bitter and crushing failures have often in them the germs of new and quite unimagined happiness.

Young Men's Column.

FIDELITY TO PRINCIPLE.

Once there was a great man who had prepared a great speech. His speech was on the slavery question, and he was opposed to that traffic in human flesh. He was urged not to deliver it. It is fifty years in advance of public opinion, said one leader. Very unwise, replied another. It will kill the Republican party, said a third. And you, too, Lincoln, said a fourth. Nothing could be more unwise; it will certainly defeat your election, added a fifth. But the speaker neve. for a moment swerved from his purpose. Suddenly facing his critics, he said: Friends, I have thought about this matter a great deal, have weighed the question well from all corners, and am thoroughly convinced the time has come when it should be uttered; and if it must be that I must go down because of this speech, then let me go down linked to truth—die in the advocacy of what is right and just.

Such was Abraham Lincoln, the statesman and patriot; the man who was once hated, the man whose memory now all good men love.

AWKWARD MECHANICS.

Mechanics are often addicted to what can only be called awkwardness. In getting at a new or strange piece of work, some men make so much fuss and appear at such poor advantage, that surprise is expressed that such an incompetent man should be employed. Most of this awkwardness or fumbling could well be avoided by the man if he would only see himself as others see him. His attention is too much taken up by some detail of the matter, and he does not comprehend the whole amount of his work. A thorough mechanic gives a thing a thorough thinking over before he proceeds to execute any work. If the awkward mechanic would learn to think more he would appear to much greater advantage, and would be worth more money to his employer.—Boston Budget.

HE SUCCEEDED.

A young editor, bright, poor and punsterous, had won the affections of a rich man's daughter, and they fixed a day for him to call on her father, and on that day he was promptly in the old gentleman's office.

We don't want any advertising to-day, interrupted the old gentleman, looking up over his glasses.

I am not on that business, sir. I come to ask you for your daughter.

What do you want with her?

Marry her.

What for?

For better or worse.

What does the girl say?

She says she will be my wife.

Ugh! You haven't got a cent in the world, have you?

Yes, sir. She gave assent, and if you give the same, that will make two, and we can buy a postage stamp, and write to you for the balance of our salary.

It was a wretched attempt, but he got the girl.

SUBJECTS FOR THOUGHT.

THE warm sunshine and the gentle zephyr may melt the glacier, which has bid defiance to the howling tempest; so the voice of kindness will touch the heart which no severity could subdue.

ABILITY without character is like a gilded boat unprovided with rudder or compass. It makes a fine show as it leaves the harbor; but, when it gets into the open sea, it is found unfit for use.

If the line which separates vice from virtue were distinctly drawn, the mark would not last long, for so many would be crowding upon it that it would soon be obliterated.

THERE is one way of attaining what we may term, if not utter, at least moral happiness; it is this a sincere and unrelaxing activity for the happiness of others.

SUCH is the destiny of great men that their superior genius always exposes them to be the butt of the venomous darts of calumny and envy.

WE are ruined, not by what we really want, but by what we think we want; it is wise therefore never to go abroad in search of our wants.

FALSE friends are like our shadows; they keep close to us while we walk in the sunshine, but leave us the instant we cross into the shade.

ALL fits of pleasure are balanced by an equal degree of pain or languor; 'tis like spending this year part of next year's revenue.

THERE are very few things in this world worth getting angry about, and they are precisely the things which anger does not help.

DOUBT, says Prof. Jewett, comes in at the window when inquiry is denied at the door.

MANHOOD.

How Lost How Restored.

JUST published, a new edition of Dr. Cull-verwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure of Spermatorrhea or incapacity induced by excess or early indigestion.

The celebrated author, in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years' successful practice, that the alarming consequences of early error may be radically cured pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself chiefly, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hand every youth and every man in the land.

Sent under seal, in a plain envelope, to any address, on receipt of four cents, or two postage stamps. Address.
