A BROKEN CONTRACT.

A bargain's a bargain, and persons who try to break their contracts because they appear to be getting more than they bargained for generally make trouble for themselves. The Lewiston, Me., Journal tells the following story;

A farmer had a good many dollars, and was much attached to them. He had also a lively, freckle-faced grandson, as agile as a squirrel and as sharp as the old man himself. The old gentleman's barn became invested with rats, and he told the boy that he would give him fifty cents apiece for all the rats he would catch alive and show to him. After two or three days little Benjamin came to old Benjamin and asked him to step into the barn. He did so and was conducted to a big disused molasses barrel, that stood in the middle of the barn floor and asked him to look into it. And there on the bottom was a wiggling mass of rats three or four deep, struggling vainly to get out of the barrel. My gorry! exclaimed the old gentleman. Where did you get all those rats? Caught 'em here in the barn gran'sir. How many be they? Eighty. That's just $40 grand'sir. Forty dollars! Why I ain't going to pay you all that money. Ain't you? Didn't you agree to? Well, yes; but I had no idee you'd catch such a lot. Over it goes then, said the boy. Waiting to give the old gentleman a chance to retract, which he failed to improve, he upset the barrel and the rats poured out around the old man's feet. With a howl of terror he climbed up on the baymow, and the rats resumed possession of the barn.

THE SEVEN AGES OF MAN.

Shakespeare, it seems, was not the first to depict the 'Seven ages of Man.' Long before they became famous in his work, and perhaps before he was born, Japanese artists had conceived the idea.

On the walls of a great tea store in New York, which has branches in Hong Kong and Shanghai, hang a series of Japanese pictures illustrating the seven picturesque periods of man's existence. The material used is matting, not canvas, and great ingenuity is displayed in the execution of the tableaux. The infant of course, figures in the first picture. The next shows the boy admitted to a university. In the third he stands up for betrothal. In the fourth he is a soldier. In the fifth, much older, he is a mandarin. In the sixth he is a dotard, dying. In the seventh he is a wraith wafted away in the wind.

THE WISE MAGISTRATE.

Many stories of keen judgment and wise decision are told of Eastern magistrates who have lived since the time of Solomon. Such tact as the judge in the following story exhibited is scarce, but is often more effective than arguments:

A district magistrate of Shanghai had brought before him a man charged with stealing a table. The man denied the charge, alleging that he was so feeble from ill health that it was physically impossible to commit such a crime. The magistrate listened gravely to the tale and professed his sympathy and sorrow for the poor man. Go home, he said, and get cured, and as you are very poor, take that bag, which contains $10,000 cash as a present from me. The prisoner made obeisance, threw the heavy bag over his shoulder and departed. He had not gone far before he was arrested, brought back and found guilty, the magistrate remarking that a man who could carry off a heavy sack could have had no difficulty in stealing a table.

SUBJECTS FOR THOUGHT.

No true and permanent fame can be found except in labors which promote the happiness of mankind.

THE PUTTING ON OF GLOVES.

A great deal depends on the first putting on of gloves. Have the hands perfectly clean, dry and cool, and never put on new gloves while the hands are warm or damp. Where a person is troubled with moist hands, it is well to powder them ere trying on the gloves; but in most cases, if the hands are dry and cool, this is not needed. First work on the fingers, keeping the thumb outside of the glove, and the wrist of the glove turned back. When the fingers are in smoothly, put in the thumb and work the glove on very carefully, then placing the elbow on the knee work on the hand. When this is done, smooth down the wrist and button the second button first, then the third, and so on to the end. Then smooth down the whole glove, and fasten the first button. Fastening the first button last, when putting on a glove for the first time, makes a good deal of difference in the fit, although it may seem but a very little thing. It does not strain the part of the glove that is the easiest to strain at first, and prevents the enlarging of the button-hole, either of which is sure to take place if you begin at the first button to fasten the glove.

When removing gloves never commence at the tips of the fingers to pull them off, but turn back the wrist and pull off carefully, which will, of course, necessitate their being wrong side out. Turn them right side out, turn the thumb in, smooth them out lengthwise in as near as possible the shape they would be if on the hands, and place away with a stripe of white cotton flannel between if the gloves are light, but if dark colored the flannel may be omitted. Never roll gloves into each other in a wad, for they will never look as well after. There is always some moisture in them from the hands; consequently, when rolled up this moisture has no chance of drying, and must work into the gloves, making them hard and stiff, and of very little use after, as far as looks or fit are concerned.—Boston Budget.

THE POWER OF SILENCE.

A pity that so few people understand the full effect of well-timed silence! How eloquent it is! Acquiescence, contradiction, deference, disdain, embarrassment, and awe, may all be expressed by saying nothing. Should you hear an assertion you deem false, made by some one of whose veracity politeness may withhold you from openly declaring your doubt, you denote a difference of opinion by remaining silent. Are you receiving a reprimand from a superior? You mark your respect by an attentive silence. Are you compelled to listen to the frivolous conversation of a fool? You signify your opinion of his loquacity with contemptuous silence. How much domestic strife might have been prevented, how often might the quarrel which by mutual aggravation has perhaps terminated in bloodshed have been checked in the commencement by judicious silence? Those persons only who have experienced them are aware of the beneficial effects of that forbearance, which, to the exasperating threat, the malicious sneer, or the unjustly imputed culpability, shall never answer a word. A soft answer turneth away wrath; but sometimes erring humanity cannot give this soft answer in moments of irritation. In such cases there stands the fortress of silence, with doors wide open, as a refuge for the tired spirit until calmer moments come. Think of this seriously, you who glory in having the last word. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be swift to hear slow to speak, slow to wrath.

TURKISH WOMEN AT HOME.

In the house the Turkish women appear to better advantage. They wear handsomely decorated slippers, or more often sit barefoot, and the dress is let loose to trail; the trousers are drawn down to the ankles, and the ferjee thrown aside with the yashmak; and above all, the face is washed of its disfiguring paint which is only worn in the street. The Turkish women then are seen to have smooth, polished skins, clear complexions and a pretty color, though dark. They are in many respects the handsomest race of women in the face, though they have absolutely nothing but rolls of fat by way of figure. The Georgians and Circassians that you see among them are slenderly built while young, though the life of utter idleness and constant gormandizing makes them grow fat also. The drollest thing is that freckles are considered the highest mark of beauty, and only the Circassians have them. The women eat much sweet food, candies and preserves, and drink inordinate quantities of Serkys tea and milk for their complexion, and eat rice in every imaginable form.

MANHOOD.

How Lost How Restored.

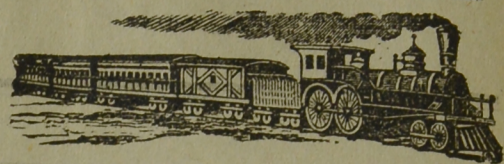

JUST published, a new edition of Dr. Cullverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure of Spermatorrhea or incapacity induced by excess or early indiscretion. The celebrated author, in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years' successful practice, that the alarming consequences of early error may be radically cured pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself chiefly, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hand every youth and every man in the land.
