HE IS RISEN INDEED!

How often our minds go back to the Babe of Bethlehem's manger. We like to follow His life. We see Him again at Jerusalem, when a mere lad, talking to the learned men, who were astonished at His understanding, then going to Nazareth with His parents and being subject unto them, where Jesus increased in wisdom and stature and in favour with God and man. We see Him again at the Jordan where He was baptized of John. What a marvelous thing took place there, the very heavens were opened and "the Spirit of God descended like a dove, and lightening upon Him." The voice of His Father acknowledged Jesus as His beloved Son.

We witness the great temptation in the wilderness, and it was surely real, for Jesus was God manifest in the flesh. When He appears triumphant, we hear John saying of Him, "behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world."

Then the calling of His disciples—and manifesting His wonder-working power, in giving sight to the blind, healing the sick, making the lame to walk, casting out devils and even raising the dead.

Multitudes followed this Man of Galilee, not because they loved Him, but to see what next He would do. For "He came unto His own and His own received Him not," but praise His name, "as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God." Hallelujah! Those three short years were full of service. Oh, how He taught, and as the gracious words fell from His lips people were astonished, for "He taught them as one having authority."

We come to His last Supper and out to Gethsemane. We don't like to think of that awful suffering or of His betrayal, of the mock trial, the insults and the cruel crown of thorns—and on to Golgotha, and the tragedy of the cross, but we can look up through our tears, and say it was all because He loved us so. But the tomb could not hold Him. He came forth a conqueror. His resurrection proves to us without a shadow of a doubt, His divinity.

And all down through the ages whenever a soul has humbly bowed before Jesus confessing their sins and accepting Him as their Saviour they too have been resurrected from the dead past to newness of life. Praise Him. This then is glad news that we have heard and believe, that He is risen indeed.
