NOTICE.

The Minutes of Alliance for 1927 are now being sent out. If any church or individual fails to receive same, please let us know.

H. C. ARCHER,
Secretary.

If your religion is a little fenced-off inclosure, open it up some; let in the sunshine and fresh air and invite somebody to view your heart treasures. You will get more out of it and make it more useful too.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

GRACE AND GRIT

A pastor was holding meetings in a school-house in a rich rural district. A wealthy farmer living a mile distant had not attended, when the wife, an unemotional woman, but of rare good sense, went to the meeting one evening. Although it was the first one she attended, she was convicted of her sins, sought the Lord and was happily converted before the meeting closed. Her special cross now was to tell her husband of her new experience. Reaching home, she found the family had retired. Her husband, arousing from sleep, said: "You are a little late getting home."

"Yes," she said, "I've been to the meeting and I've been converted, and I want you to come with me."

He was silent for a moment or two, then said, "Mary, you could not have done a thing which would have displeased me more. Don't speak of it to me again. Come to bed."

It was the most abrupt remark he had made to her in twenty years of wedded life. But she knew his will, and not a word was spoken until the morning. She did not speak, and silently the whole night commended his case to God. She knew he also was far from having a good night of rest. Farmer-like, they ate their breakfast by candle-light. No sooner was he seated at the table than he said:

"Children, your mother says she was converted at the meeting last night, and she won't want to eat without a blessing being asked, so keep still while she asks one."

The good woman would not deny her Lord. She asked the blessing as best she could. There was silence during the meal. When the hired man pushed back to leave the room, the man of the house said:

"My wife says she is converted, and of
