SOCIAL REFORM

Your Committee on Social Reform regrets that we have no outstanding reforms to commend. The evil and injurious habits of drinking, smoking, dancing and Sabbath breaking still continue and according to the present stand of our country we fear we can look for no improvement. Concerning the matter of dressing we are glad to note that the trend is toward more modest styles.

We believe that the literature of today has very much to do with the degrading of our young people. We were glad to note in a recent press that papers which three years ago demanded the most emphasis on sex subjects are requesting stories setting forth purity and morality.

We regret the worldly spirit that has taken control of our institutions of learning, and feel that the young who seek an education are subjected to an unfair disadvantage, both educationally and socially. There are subjects of study in the textbooks in direct variance with the teachings of the word of God. Paul said the "World by wisdom knew not God." I. Cor. 3:19, also the social functions are not conducted in a manner we can approve of, but the young must either absent themselves entirely or be witnesses of the degrading dance and customs which are detrimental to spiritual welfare. "Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." James 4:4.

Only the revelation of God Himself to the hearts of young and old can assure safety in the midst of a "sinful generation."

FRIENDSHIP

The noblest life is that which is lived for the benefit of mankind in general, not confined to those of our own nationality, creed or doctrine—the life that is lost in service for others—given away ungrudgingly, that overflows as it were, irrigating the fields of toil, suffering, want, etc.

The man who has never experienced the joy of doing things from a pure unselfish motive, can scarcely be said to have really lived, it has been more an existence than a life.

We cannot go through life unselfishly without making friends. It has been said that a real friend cannot be frozen up by adversity any more than a rushing, bubbling stream could congeal in wintry weather. Many of that type are on record in the Scriptures. We read with intense interest the outburst of genuine affection from Ruth to Naomi. "Where thou goest I will go; where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people; thy God shall be my God;" country, friends and religion all forsaken because her soul went out in unfeigned love towards her mother-in-law, Naomi.

Jonathan and David give us the most striking evidence of real friendship on record, between man and man; a friendship which thrived in the midst of hatred, envy and malice, which oftentimes threatened the life of one or both of them, on account of their fidelity to one another.

Character is the essential quality in order for true friendship to exist. St. Paul's life of service was based on obedience. He declared "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." It enabled him when he was called to suffer in this service for others to "count it all joy to suffer" for Jesus' sake. "The highest motives instigated his diligence in the commonest manual toil," which was proven throughout his strenuous years of ministry to be no hindrance to communion with God. It was rather a constant service of joy and peace to be doing service for his Master, and without charge. Paul loved the people he endeavoured to minister to. His was a friendship based upon service, not for what he would receive in return for his services, for he evidently kept in mind the incentive—"We serve the Lord Christ."

The highest, truest, grandest friendship in all the world is the friendship of our Lord. He stands before men the perfect type of friendship, founded on pure love alone; He gave His life for us, the supreme test of any friend, and that when we were enemies to Himself. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

Many today are obeying "the heavenly vision." You may still be busy with your hands, 'providing for your own needs and those that are with you, yet fulfilling your calling, doing daily the Master's will. Will anyone read these lines who has become disobedient to the heavenly vision?" Brother Warren wrote a few months ago a few words of counsel and warning to those who are disobedient. "Let no man take thy crown."
