"WE SHALL BE LIKE HIM"

"Beloved, now are we the sons of God," writes Saint John, "And it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." It is plainly difficult to describe the heavenly state in the languages of earth, and so we find it when we attempt to speak of resurrection in the light of the things we know. Springtime suggests it, but spring awakenings in the lands where winter prevails fail to tell the story of the eternal security, the celestial light and the fullness of joy that are realized by the saints that are at home with God after the resurrection morning. "It doth not yet appear" Saint John says, in acknowledgement of the greatness of the task of opening up the mystery of the resurrection.

When we read "we shall be like Him" we enter into a world of new meaning. Several descriptions appear of our Lord in His glorified state which, aside from their regal power, are full of interest to the follower of Jesus as a type of our future state. If we are truly like Jesus in soul in this life, we shall be like Him in the indescribable glory and safety of the eternal world.—The Wesleyan Methodist.

HEAVEN A HOME

Home! Oh, how sweet is that word! What beautiful and tender associations cluster thick around it; compared with it, house, mansion, palace are cold, heartless terms. But home! that word quickens the pulse, warms the heart, stirs the soul to its depths, makes age feel young again, rouses apathy into energy, sustains the sailor in his midnight watch, inspires the soldier with courage on the field of battle, and imparts patient endurance to the worn-down sons of toil. The thought of home has proved a seven-fold shield to virtue; its very name has a spell to call back the wanderer from the paths of vice; and far away, where myrtles bloom, and palm trees wave, the ocean sleeps upon coral strands, to the exile's fond fancy, it clothes the naked rock, or stormy shore, or barren moor, wild Highland mountain with charms he weeps to think of, and longs once more to see.

Grace sanctifies these lovely affections, and imparts a sacredness to the homes of earth, by making them types of heaven. As a home, the believer delights to think of it. Thus, while lately bending over a dying saint, and expressing our sorrow to see him lay so low, with the radiant countenance rather of one who had just left heaven than of one about to enter it, he raised and clasped his hands, and exclaimed in ecstasy, "I am going home!" —Selected.
