THE ACCUSING DISH

"If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins" (I John 1:9).

When Mrs. Lane went to the pantry on Tuesday morning and found a broken dish, she asked her eldest boy how it happened.

"I don't know," said he. "Why don't you ask Louise? You always blame me."

"All right," said Mother, and when Louise was questioned she opened her large brown eyes and said, "Why, I did not know it was broken."

"You would tell me if you broke it, wouldn't you?" asked Mother.

"Yes, Mamma, I would buy you another one."

"Very well; we will say no more about it," said Mother, and so the day passed.

Next morning the dish was still on the shelf, and when Carl saw it he said:

"I did not break it, and I will not say I broke it."

"Never mind," said Mother, just leave it there."

Thursday morning, and still the dish was there, and Carl felt worse than ever and denied more stoutly that he knew anything about it.

"Don't speak about it any more," said Mrs. Lane.

Friday morning Carl seemed to be feeling troubled in his mind and Mother said:

"Would you like to speak to me?"

A complete confession followed. The broken dish was removed and Carl was forgiven. The frown was replaced by a smile and peace took the place of condemnation.

LOVE TESTED

"I do love God," said a little girl to her father one day when he had been talking to her about loving God.

"Suppose, my child, that you should come to me and say, 'Dear Father, I do love you,' and then go away and disobey me; could I believe you?"

"No, Father."

"Well, dear," was the reply, "how can I believe you love God when I see you every day doing things which He forbids?"

The true prayer is not an attempt to change God's will—it is rather an attempt to order ourselves in accordance with His will.—Selected.
