AFRICAN DIARY

for my own health's sake (I am fine) but for the opportunity of observing the inner working of this great institution. Technically, during various tests, I was a patient and spent two nights there. I was cared for by Zulu nurses who impressed me with their devotion, efficiency, and poise. Each nurse was a testimony to the careful training and consecrated skill of the medical staff. Missions and medicine, to my mind, are a tremendously effective combination. McCord has a 330 bed capacity, and with the exception of an occasional visitor like myself, or a missionary, all the patients are African, along with a few Indians. So far as I could see there was not an empty bed, and I took a complete tour. What an opportunity! Besides the regular witness of doctors and nurses I noticed that on the staff there was a Christian worker whose sole task, every day, was to read the Bible to the patients, sing hymns, and bring them the message of Christ. Another significant part of the hospital schedule was the morning chapel service for nurses and staff. I will never forget the effect of 50 or 60 Zulu nurses singing the Lord's Prayer in their own language. It was my privilege while at McCord to give a devotional address at a reception for an entering class of nurses specializing in midwifery. It may be readily inferred that my experiences have been many and diverse.

Before I left Durban a missionary friend took me out a few miles to the new African township of Kwa Mashu. This is a government sponsored housing project. I have thought of adjectives to use here, and I might be pardoned if I say it was fantastic. There were literally thousands of simple brick dwellings all over the hills and in the valleys. Maybe 125,000 people were living here. The place looked very hot and dusty. I don't remember seeing any trees. I saw about 16 churches in the project, including one Free Methodist and one Assemblies of God. Not far away from here was the old African township of Cato Manor, where the "houses" consisted mostly of strips of corrugated iron on top of mud walls. Both places were terribly depressing, but in a different sort of way.

My return trip to Modderpoort was not quite so fast. I "enjoyed" my maiden voyage on a South African train. While my trip to Durban was exactly eight hours, my return took nearly twenty. It was wearisome, but every stop was some kind of an adventure — little boys holding out their hands for pennies, Zulus selling fresh peaches, or a flock of tall, white tick birds walking around with a herd of cattle.

I was delighted with the trip, but was glad to be back in the quiet of Modderpoort where the cypresses are tall on the mission grounds, and the wind sighs through a small grove of pines.
