THE NEEDED TOUCH

Once on a snow-beaten shore a scant crew was trying in vain to drive the heavy lifeboat to the surf to rescue the survivors of a sinking ship. But their combined strength was just too little, and they sent to the nearby village for reinforcements. There was nobody left but one poor cripple, and he might have said, "What can a cripple do to launch a lifeboat?" But his added strength was just the increment they needed, just the few pounds more of added weight that moved that resisting mass; and as he threw his weight upon the cable, it slipped along the sands and in a few moments was out in the roaring tide. That one touch launched the lifeboat, saved the shipwrecked sailors, and accomplished the work of that one day of rescue. Beloved, your touch, your help, your consecrated weakness thrown upon the Lord's side may win the day.—A. B. Simpson.
