Big Triple Bill!

Laugh! If this guy Denny don't bust every button off'n your vest in this screamingly hilarious happening hit, you need a new set of laugh muscles. That's all. Why, say: A guy in New York was watchin' this picture and he laughed so much . . . but wait till you see Denny—you'll KNOW what we mean.

It Gives You That Grand and Glorious Feeling!

Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag and smile, for Reginald Denny's coming to town to show you "WHAT HAPPENED TO JONES" when his poker party was raided and he climbed down the fire-escape—backed into the steam room on Ladies' Night in the Turkish Bath, dressed up in the Bishop's clothes and married the other fellow's girl. It's a typical breezy Denny farce that will shake your eyebrows loose with laughter.

LAUGH with

RECIPE

Take a small pinch of Denny—mix it with a dash of humor—spice it with a pretty girl and Oh, Mamma there's happiness pie and don't say "maybe." And he's got the stage success that set NEW YORK on its ear with daughter in "What Happened to Jones."

THUMBNAILED THEME

Tom Jones, a wealthy bible manufacturer, on the eve of his marriage, promises his fiancée to travel the path of strictest rectitude. Unfortunately for his promise, he is inveigled into a poker game which is raided by the police. In his efforts to escape from the law, he exits via the fire-escape only to find himself in a woman's Turkish Bath. The steam room becomes too hot for him and he sheds his clothes. Discovery being imminent, he purloins a woman's dress, in which disguise he manages to make his way into the street. Eventually, he reaches the home of his friend, but the friend's clothes do not fit him, being made for a man weighing about 300 pounds. Just then announcement is made that his friend's brother, a bishop, is on his way to the house and he had sent his clothes on in advance to be pressed. Tom seizes on the clerical garments and finds them a perfect fit. Just as he is about to leave, his friend's wife enters and mistakes him for the real bishop, she never having met the latter. From then on the fun is fast and furious. The hapless hero becomes involved in more and more trouble. Eventually, of course, he just manages to clear himself and the final fadeout is a riot of laughs and chuckles.

The shades of night were falling fast—the stars hung in their accustomed places in the Heavens—the whole world was serene and asleep when along came Denny and then, oh, man what happened to Reginald rocked old Mother Earth with side-splitting laughter and joy. It's the cream of the screams.

chases to bare necessities, are expressing their opposition to the new religious regulations.

The slump in silver exchange, while bankers denied it was attributed to the boycott, caused much uneasiness in the business world. The prices of some foodstuffs increased, causing alarm among some of the people. The government's first admission of concern regarding the situation came when Finance Minister Pani appointed a committee of experts to study and recommend methods for a solution of the economic situation.

An appraisal of the present conditions must include recognition of the fact that business in Mexico has been depressed for months. Long before the development of the religious controversy many business men were gloomy over the outlook. The boycott to some extent has made bad matters worse. Imperial observers, however, express the conviction that present conditions or even considerably worse conditions, could prevail for a long time without the government being forced to yield. Prospects of an early agreement continue as remote as ever.
