Plate Depicts Discovery of Indian Sea Passage

A magnificent silver dish, twenty inches in diameter, presented by King Emmanuel of Portugal to the famous explorer Vasca da Gama in 1499 in recognition of the latter's discovery of the sea route to India, was recently on exhibition in the windows of the downtown offices of the Canadian Pacific Railway on St. James street. The dish is now owned by Rene Dupuis, graduate of the University of Nancy, France, a resident of Montreal.

The dish is circular with a wide border and is a beautiful specimen of the most exquisite repousse work of the celebrated European silversmiths. In the centre is admirably depicted in practically every detail the quaint old ship, the San Gabriel, which was Da Gama's flagship on his famous voyage to India.

Around the figure of the ship are striking impressions of wild beasts and flowers. On a raised border of silver around the vessel are two inscriptions, barely visible to the eye. The first reads "Emmanuel le Grand to Vasco de Gama, 1499". The second inscription is: "Marquis Nizada da Gama to M. Anne Duportal, Commandant du Cygne, 1846." The second inscription was placed there when the relic was given to Commandant Duportal for saving the life of the Marquis, a descendant of da Gama.

Vasca da Gama was called to the Portuguese court and given an expedition to discover a sea passage to the Indies. He was given the following instructions by his king, "Go south as far as there is water. And when you have reached the edge of the world, turn towards India which we know exists because we have made land journeys there." On July 8, 1497 a helmeted, powerful figure stood on board a vessel waving adieu to Lisbon. Determination was depicted in the powerful jaws. An iron will was evident in the steel-grey eyes. Every motion, every movement this mighty man made told of his high resolve to do as he had been commissioned by his king.

The San Gabriel rounded the Cape of Good Hope after da Gama had quelled a munity of his rebellious sailors, and reached the coast of Malabar, the south-west corner of India in May 1498. On September 1, 1499 the vessel sailed proudly into Lisbon to the accompaniment of loud shouts from the huge crowd assembled to greet her and the heroic commander. It was in that year that da Gama was awarded the historic silver dish by a grateful monarch as an expression of esteem and regard from an admiring court and a thankful nation.

Da Gama made another voyage to India in 1502, planting Portuguese colonies at Mozambique and other places, and returned in 1503 with a rich cargo. For this work he was awarded a title and appointed admiral of the Portuguese navy. Some twenty-one years later he made his last voyage to India. He fell ill on the way, died in Cochin, Indo-China, and was buried on the Malabar coast where he had cowed into submission a sullen crew of mutineers twenty-six years before. But the gallant admiral's friends would not let his body remain in foreign soil. So it was brought back to Portugal and buried in 1538 with all the honor and homage due a national hero.

It is interesting to note that a Canadian Pacific liner, the Empress of Scotland is at present sailing around India through the very waters which Vasco da Gama was the first European to traverse.

RICHEST WOMAN IN GREAT BRITAIN

The new Duchess of Montrose, whose husband, the Marquis of Graham, succeeds to the dukedom on the death of his father, is generally believed to be the richest woman in Great Britain.

Her father, the late Duke of Hamilton, left her £100,000 outright, with £7,000 a year in addition, and all his lands, except those which were entailed with the titles. These included Arran, the woldest and most picturesque island on the Clyde, and the Eaton Park estate in Suffolk, the rentals from which amount to 27,000 pounds a year.

The duchess was Lady Mary Douglas-Hamilton before her marriage to the aMrquis in 1906.

Had she been a boy she would have been the holder of ten British and two Scottish titles, including that of Scotland's premier duke; but as it is, she is the possessor of an enormous fortune, and is now the wife, as well as the daughter of a duke.

The duchess' childhood was spent on the Isle of Arran, where the family lived in the historic Brolick Castle.

Although the castle itself is a modern structure, it is built on the site of a fortress that dated from the Norse invasion, and dotted about the coast are caves, which, according to tradition, once gave shelter to Robert Bruce. She and her husband have spent much of their married life at Brodick Catle.

The duchess was one of the first women to undertake the duties of master of hounds, and is an enthusiastic deer-stalker, having as many as twenty stags to her credit in one season. She is a bold horsewoman, and ser kindly and unaffected manner has made her unusually popular among all classes in the hunting field.

The new Duke of Montrose is primarily a sailor. He had two years' naval training and afterwards earned his master's certificate in the Mercantile Marine.

He is a successful business man, being a director of the great Clyde shipbuilding firm of Beardmore. Just after the war he transformed his sporting estate at Epsom, Suffolk, into a great farm, and inaugurated a copartnership scheme by which all of the employes shared in the profits.

A FARMER'S ACCOUNT BOOK.

Experimental Farms Note)

The Dominion Experimental Farms system has published an extremely simple farmer's account book, designed to last a complete year. To "keep" it needs no special knowledge of accounting; simply the ability to write and add; and a record of all transactions might be made in an hour a week. A few plain directions as to making entries, some aids to taking inventories, a table of silo capacities and a gestation table, are given on the insides of the cover.

In the book itself are pages for the entry of receipts and expenditures (both of which may be sen at a glance on the same page) relative of cattle, horses, sheep, swine, poultry, crops and labour; and there is also ample space for miscellaneous items. There is a page for amounts owed to and by the farm, and forms on which may be made inventories of land and buildings, of live stock, of feed and supplies, and of machinery. Following is a page on which may be filled out a summary of the year's business, together with the few directions necessary to filling it out intelligently at the end of the year. Further, for the farmer's information there is a table in which to enter acreage and yield of crops, and one in which to keep a live stock service record.

Send for one now and record your transactions from the beginning of 1926. It is obtainable from the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, at a nominal charge of ten cents. No postage need be placed on letters of application.

AN ADVENTUROUS VOYAGE

An adventurous voyage is to be undertaken in 1926 by a young Norwegian, Captain Folgero, who is to sail with three companions from Bergen to America, in a vessel made on the model of the famous Gokstad Viking ship, which is preserved in a museum in Oslo.

According to a Norwegian story, the first white man to cross the Atlantic and land on American soil was the Viking, Leif Ericson. Some five hundred years before Columbus reached the West Indies, this hardy Norseman was driven by storms on an unknown shore, which Norwegian historians claim, was probably Massachusetts.

Captain Folgero's voyage is to be undertaken with the object of silencing those critics of the Ericson claim who declare that no Viking ship could ever have crossed the Atlantic. The modern sons of the old sea kings will sail to Dover in the first instance, and then via Cape Finisterre and Madeira, to Cape Hatteras. They then intend to visit New York, Boston and Chicago, and to wind up by taking their little vessel through the Panama Canal to the Pacific side of North America.

It is a daring project, but perhaps a trifle inconsiderate. Imagine the feelings of the twentieth century sailorman who, knowing nothing of Captain Folgero or his plans, suddenly sees a Viking ship to port or starboard!

TOMB OF CRUSADER FOUND IN JERUSALEM

It was announced recently that the intact tomb of Sir Philip d'Aubeny, who went to Jerusalem with the Fifty Crusade and died there in 1236, has been found in Jerusalem.

This historical fact of the burial of Sir Philip d'Aubeny had been preserved and it was confirmed about eighty years ago, when a slab was discovered in the courtyard of the Church of the Sepulchre with the epitaph of Sir Philip, a Norman shield and the d'Aubeny armorial bearings.

Since Jerusalem passed out of Turkish control at the end of the war, the descendants of the d'Aubeny family have been eager to remove the slab in order to preserve it from wear and mutilation.

A private letter from Jerusalem tells of the raising of the slab. The adjoining stones in the courtyard were lifted under the direction of Lord Plummer, the High Commissioner and Sir Ronald Storrs, Governor of Jerusalem. It was found that one end of the slab rested on ancient masonry, which appeared to be the foundation of an earlier church.
