HIS CHUM

A newsboy sat on the curbstone crying when a pedestrian halted and laid his hand on the youngster's shoulder. "What's wrong, sonny?" "I ain't your sonny." "Well, what's wrong, my boy?" "I ain't your boy, either." "Lost five cents in the gutter?" "Naw, I ain't—oh, oh, oh! My chum is dead." "Oh, that's another thing. How did he happen to die?" "Runned over." "Cheer up! You can find another chum." "You wouldn't talk that way if you know'd Dick: He was the best friend I ever had. There warn't nothing

Dick wouldn't do a thing for me. An' now he's d-d-dead. I'm wishin' I was dead, too." "Look here," said the man, "go and sell your papers and take some poor little ragged boy and be a chum to him. I'll help you and do him good." "Pshaw, mister, where's there a boy who'd go around nights with me and be cold and hungry an' outen doors an' sleep on the groun' like Dick? An' he wouldn't touch a bite till I'd had enough. He were a Christian, Dick were." "Then you can feel that he's all right if he was such a faithful friend and good boy." "Boy? Dick a boy? Land! Dick warn't a good for nothin' human boy, mister—Dick were a dog."

A wealthy motorist, while touring through Georgia, drove up to a gasoline station and found the tender a lazy country boy.

"Hey, boy," said the motorist, "I want some gasoline. You'll never get anywhere in this world unless you push. Push is essential. When I was young I pushed, and that got me where I am."

"Well, boss," said the boy, "I reckon as how you'll have to push again 'cause we ain't got a drop of gas in the place."
