NEW VILLAGE FOUND IN FAR NORTHERN LAND

A hitherto unknown village in a remote interior of the Arctic zone is reported by the Russian officer, S. Popow, in the Russkoje Wrenja.

On his wanderings through northern Siberia, Popow stumbled on a village of 38 male and female inhabitants who had never seen a stranger before. The village is thousands of kilometers from any human habitation and enclosed on three sides by a vast bog.

Popow, who lived among the villagers for two years, describes them as being almost primeval in their habits and instincts and as having but a vague notion that they are Russian.

They speak Russian, but so profusely interspersed with old Slavic words as to be almost unrecognizable.

MUTILATED FRENCH SOLDIERS PARADE

Nothing could have been more touching, more affecting, or more effective than the controlled, disciplined ranks of mutilated French soldiers who paraded in Paris on July 11, appealing to the American public to soften the terms of debt settlement.

Americans who saw that parade must have winced—if they did not weep. Those glorious, shattered soldiers, those memories of old heroic, generous days when men and women gave their lives and their treasure without bargaining and without conditions, how different from these careful, so-called days of reckoning and jealous accounting! So they must have felt who witnessed the long defile of heroes, those broken men who gave everything except their lives in the defense of a good cause.

It must have been an immensely effective appeal, a direct attack on the emotions and all the generous instincts of the safe, healthy, rich tourists who lined the boulevards. Even here, in America, the cheeks of profiteers flushed for a moment as they read the story of that pathetic gesture.

The whole drama of recent history has no moment of more vivid irony.

And yet, and yet—somehow, we don't like it at all. In the first place, we believe that the French attitude which demands as right and proper a further reduction in the terms of the debt settlement or its cancellation is false in its premises and logic. It assumes that the French fought our war and saved us from the German menace—a very dubious assumption indeed; it implies the total cancellation of all war debts owed by any country to any other. Logically, France should abandon all claims to Russia's obligations, including the pre-war external loans which were incurred with a view to future military requirements. It carries inevitably with it the principle that cancellation of debts should result whenever one nation co-operates in a military sense with another. It is impossible both in theory and practice.

In the second place, we wonder how many of the wounded soldiers in the parade, how many French men and women, for that matter, know the proposed terms of debt settlement. Do they realize that these terms cancel about one half of the total French obligations to this country? We doubt it. Do they understand that our Government—which asked that our Peace Conference except the right to bring back the bodies of our soldiers—went into debt to the amount of $26,000,000,000 in order to help the Allied nations of Europe overcome an enemy bent on their destruction? We doubt this, too. They see us only as rich and powerful creditors pressing them in their destitution and hardship for the dollars they owe us. We are grateful for the blood shed in our behalf. The misunderstanding is complete and apparently final.

Who is responsible for this misunderstanding? Here we come to the real centre of the problem. The French people did not create the misunderstanding out of their own minds. The wounded soldiers who paraded in Paris did not do so as an instinctive and spontaneous gesture. Who organized and taught this theory of international finance? For years the venal French press and the interested French politicians have preached, in season and out of season, the doctrine that the ills of France were due to the financial oppressions of America. The French public actually believes that the depreciation of the franc is somehow caused by the threat to the American debt settlement. As France has never paid a single sou of interest or principal, the weakness of the franc can only be due to the operations of commerce and exchange for which no foreign Government is responsible. To that, and perhaps to the extravagance and foolishness of French policy since the war which has squandered money on military adventure, on shaky alliances, and doubtful loans, which has preferred holding office to attempting an honest settlement of the country's difficulties; which has, we believe, deliberately made Uncle Sam the scapegoat for its own sins of omission and commission. If we cannot balance the budget or dare not levy the necessary taxes; if we have no effective financial theory; if our profound corruption and our untrustworthy stewardship are about to be disclosed, let us lay the blame for our moral, political, and financial bankruptcy on America, on Uncle Sam, the avaricious, the greedy dollar worshipper. So have argued the sinister and discredited men who have controlled the destinies of the Third Republic since the armistice. Through their speech in and out of Parliament, through their controlled and subsidized press they have constantly reiterated the legend of guilty, greedy America. All the arts of propaganda mastered during the war have been applied to this purpose. They have succeeded. The French public forgets the authentic scandals of its politicians and remembers only the fiction of our greed.

REGAL FLOUR

No, we do not like the incident of the parade of the wounded. Particularly, we dislike the exploitation of those brave and suffering men, the generous emotion cynically capitalized by interested politicians. Induced to drag their mutilated bodies, to walk in squalid darkness through the streets—those cripples and those blind men were used to create an atmosphere, a smoke screen behind which smooth gentlemen in black coats could avoid their responsibilities. The incident—in that sense—is not merely pathetic; it is revolting and monstrous. The wounded soldiers of France deserve better than the role of cat's-paws for politicians. And we deserve better than the role of a harsh, oppressive creditor. No misunderstanding was ever more tragic, and none so unnecessary and stupid.

A 78-year-old woman named MacCallum is in the hospital in Truro, N. S., with both feet amputated as a result of being struck by a fast freight train near Truro on Thursday last. ACIDS IN STOMACH CAUSE INDIGESTION

Create Gas, Sourness and Pain How To Treat

Medical authorities state that nearly nine-tenths of the cases of stomach trouble, indigestion, sourness, burning, gas, bloating, nausea, etc., are due to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach and not as some believe to a lack of digestive juices. The delicate stomach lining is irritated, digestion is delayed and food sours, causing the disagreeable symptoms which every stomach sufferer knows so well.

Artificial digestants are not needed in such cases and may do real harm. Try laying aside all digestive aids and instead get from any drugstore a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia and take a teaspoonful in a quarter glass of water right after eating. This sweetens the stomach, prevents the formation of excess acid and there is no sourness, gas or pain. Bisurated Magnesia (in powdered or tablet form—never liquid or milk) is harmless to the stomach, inexpensive to take and is the most efficient form of magnesia for stomach purposes. It is used by thousands of people who enjoy their meals with no more fear of indigestion.
