NEWS OF THE WORLD IN BRIEF

Six prominent Catholic laymen have handed to the chamber of deputies a petition requesting an amendment of the religious clauses of the Mexican constitution. The petition is identical with that presented to the chamber by the Catholic Episcopate some time ago and which was rejected because it was signed by only prelates, who are not entitled under the law to address the congress.

The ship on which Queen Maud of Norway, sister of King George, came from Oslo to England underwent a terrific buffeting during a fierce gale. The Queen was a passenger on the 1,781 ton steamer Bessheim, which struggled into Newcastle at midnight fourteen hours late. The Royal passenger was too ill to land and passed the night on the Bessheim. Members of the ship's personnel suffered severely from the effects of the gale.

Former King George and Queen Elizabeth of Greece, who have been enjoying an excursion on the Danube with King Ferdinand, now have returned to Bucharest by special train from Braila. The unexpected move is said to be in connection with recent events in Greece.

Word from Clifton, a village near Truro, N. S., states that a sow, owned by E. E. Crowe, of that district, gave birth to a litter of 25 pigs. Eleven of the lot were raised and fourteen died before they reached an age to be taken from the mother. Farmers, in and about that district, believe this is a record for Nova Scotia, and certainly one for Colchester County. The sow is a pure bred Yorkshire and a fine type of pig.

Chester Imeson, 16 year old nephew of George Brown, farmer of Windsor, N.S., was arrested recently by provincial police, charged with attempting to poison his uncle by administering strychnine in his coffee. The boy lived with his uncle and alleged to police after his arrest that Brown had beaten and abused him. He found the strychnine bottle and knew it was poison. Brown detected the strychnine which had failed to mix with the coffee in his drink, and promptly complained to the police.

Jack Sharkey, of Boston, won from Harry Willis, negro heavyweight, by a fifteen round bout at Ebbett's Field, Brooklyn, on Tuesday night, Oct. 12. Sharkey was forcing the fight and was far ahead of points when the negro was disqualified for using back hand blows.

Jewels valued at approximately 90,000 francs ($2,700,000) were stolen by burglars who robbed the famous chateau of the Duc d'Aumale, maintained as a national museum. A number of priceless pieces were taken from the jewelry collection, including the famous rose diamond known as "The Grand Conde." A diamond studded dagger which belonged to the Arab chief Abdel-Kadir, another equally bejeweled one, once the property of the Bey of Tunis, several art objects in gold, and several miniatures were also carried away by the burglars.

Contest of the will of Rudolph Valentino has been ordered by Albert and Marie Guglielmi, brother and sister of the film star. The effort to break the will, will centre on the clause, leaving the entire estate in trust to William for the benefit of the two Guglielmis and Mrs. Teresa Werner, aunt of Valentino's divorced wife, Natacha Rambova.

Forty-two years of nagging, married life, was too much for Benjamin Wallace, 75 years old, and his wife, Mary E. Wallace, aged 54, with a chair, at their home in Camden, N. J., according to a confession made to police.

"You can't bring an action against anyone you love." This was the reply of Edward W. Browning, the wealthy real estate man, when asked if he would sue his 16 year old wife Frances (Peaches) Browning because of a series of articles under his wife's name, in a New York newspaper purporting to give the reasons for leaving him a week ago.

"I still love my wife," Browning reiterated. "In spite of all that she has said, I want her back. She was a wife to me in name only. I wanted a child. My life's ambition is to have a child and a home. Refusal of his mother-in-law to leave him alone with his 16 year old wife, is now one of the reasons advanced by Edward W. Browning for the marital troubles he has experienced during the past week.

THOSE WHO GO EMPTY AWAY

No saying of the Great Comrade has puzzled people more than the one about rich men finding it difficult to enter the Kingdom of Heaven.

By most of those who profess and call themselves Christians this is explained as "Oriental symbolism." It doesn't mean what it seems to mean.

How could anyone even think of Heaven without those who are the most important figures on earth? What justice could there be in shutting out the subscribers to all charities, the great employers ("but for whom the working classes would starve"), the pillars of the Churches, the creators and tenders of the machinery of life?

Certainly in a material Kingdom of Heaven, in an after-life such as most believers in eternity picture vaguely to themselves, there would have to be rich men. The poor wouldn't be happy without them.

Think what a delight the poor take on earth in reading about the rich, in crowding to see them married, in looking at pictures of them taken on racing-courses, at shooting parties, at yachting regattas, on the Riviera or in Egypt.

It must be contended that the poor got as much pleasure out of Goodwood this past week and out of Ascot last month as did the wealthy, the elegant, the "care-free" (so one newspaper-writer styled them) who attended these events. The splendor, the luxury, the leisured comfort which are displayed on such occasions seem to make up to millions of dwellers in mean streets, wearers of shabby, dirty clothing, folks who never eat any but cheap, coarse food, for the unpleasantness of their own lives.

"It cannot be said that the mass of the English people are well off. There are whole classes who have not a conception of what the higher orders call comfort; who have not the pre-requisites of moral existence; who cannot lead the life that becomes a man."

So wrote a careful observer more than half a century ago. And how did he account for the patience with which these classes endured their discomforts? He said they were imposed upon by the "theatrical show" of society.

"A certain state passes before them, a certain pomp of great men; a certain spectacle of beautiful women; a wonderful scene of wealth and enjoyment is displayed, and they are coerced by it."

That was true half a century ago. It is still true of a very large number of the English people today. It accounts for the general refusal to accept it as face value the saying that rich men find it difficult to enter the Kingdom of Heaven.

One of our judges made it clear a few days ago that he has never pondered its meaning. He said during one of his cases:—

"Rich relations are welcome, but we don't extend the same welcome to poor ones."

Has he never observed that this is true only of well-to-do people? Those who are really poor welcome the poor, whether they are relations or not. They have no false pride to be hurt; no fear that neighbors will despise them; no feeling that there is a great gulf fixed between them and those who are in need.

The more one has, the less one is inclined to part with any of it. Those who have nothing more than is sufficient for the day's simplest needs are almost always ready to share it with others.

Rich people dislike their poor relations because they are afraid of being expected to do something for them —lend them money, or speak a good word for them, or get their children into schools.

Wealthy might feel if they knew that there was nothing behind the visits their poor relations pay them.

I knew a man once who had made a big fortune. He longed to talk over old times with relatives and friends of his early days. He didn't care, he told me, to go among them.

"They'd be at me all the time."

He was wrong. Those among whom he had been brought up were straight-backed, independent folk. They would have scorned to ask him for a penny. He was a poor creature.

In terror of being asked for money, (though he gave largely to one or two hospitals, which used to advertise his gifts—to the benefit, as he thought, of his business). But he set me on the right track to discover what the saying about Rich Men means.

We go astray if we think that the Kingdom of Heaven spoken of is anywhere but on this earth. It was the Kingdom of Comradeship that Jesus meant.

His remark about it being hard for the rich man to enter was not a threat. He was merely telling His hearers what he had noticed, and what we all have noticed, if we have used our eyes and brains.

The rich men I have known intimately had very few friends, very little love in their lives. It isn't always so; but it is so as a rule, I think. The rich are self-centred (you have to be, to get or to keep rich). They have no time for anyone who cannot be used for some purpose of their own.

Therefore they are, most of them, shut out from the Kingdom of Comradeship—that realm where what you are is all that matters, and where what you've got is of no importance at all.
