THE EVER-READY SAILOR

The Birmingham Post tells among other good stories the following, told by a naval captain with a long war experience in the course of a recent lecture. It deals with Commodore Tyrwhitt, the leader of the little force of light cruisers and destroyers used in attempts to decoy the German fleet. One day Zeppelins were flying high out of range of guns and sea-planes, and it was expedient to stop their inconvenient surveillance of the North Sea. An aeroplane was sent up. All eyes followed its course, until it was lost to sight. Would it, or would it not, be able to climb to the altitude of the Zeppelin? The question was answered by the silver pencil in the sky—Zeppelins always looked like silver pencils—suddenly bursting into flames and falling slowly in two portions. Even before the remains of the Zeppelin had struck the sea, the flagship Arctura, had a string of color from the masthead, reading: "See Hymn 324, last verse." We know the "ever-ready" tradition of the Navy, but how many naval officers, one wonders, could have fitted so swiftly to the event of the moment the deliciously apposite lines beginning "O happy band of pilgrims"? To those who are unfamiliar with the hymn it may not be out of place to print the "last verse":

"Oh happy band of pilgrims,
Look upward to the skies,
Where such a light affliction
Shall win so great a prize."

POOR ON A $4,000 STIPEND

A pathetic story of a clergyman's fight against economic adversity lies behind an advertisement in the North Canadian Jephson, rector of Ecton, Northamptonshire, invited offers for a gold watch and chain, which cost £50 in 1887, and for certain books.

The living of Ecton is nominally of the value of £800 a year, but actually it is much less. There is a charge of £130 a year on it as a pension to Canon Jephson's predecessor in the living, and £200 is absorbed in rates and taxes. Repairs to the rectory, which the holder of the living has to carry out under the terms of his appointment, cost at least 50 pounds a year.

These items reduce the income to £380, but for seven years Canon Jephson has had to maintain a wife, who is an invalid, in an institution. The cost of this was originally £250 a year, but has now been reduced to £100.

At present he has just over £300 a year on which to live in his huge house and to maintain his position, and he finds it an impossible task.

For six years he has been selling books, furniture and plate. Among treasured articles he has parted with is a Chippendale bookcase which had been in his family over 200 years and which realized £97, and 20 volumes of his Pentland edition of Stevenson's works.

Canon Jephson became rector of Ecton 17 years ago, after working 30 years in London. The watch he advertised for sale was a gift from his parishioners of St. John's, Walworth, when he left. He was Mayor of Southwark in 1905 and was for some years a member of the L. C. C.

CANADIAN S. P. C. A. CONSIDER HOME FOR DUMB CREATURES

Montreal will become the show place of the Canadian Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, within the present year. A resident of this city, who has been a friend of the society for many years, will probably be asked to allow the proposed $100,000 home for dumb animals to bear his name.

The institution will closely resemble the Robert Angell Memorial Home in Boston, which is a million dollar structure, but, while having all the up-to-date features of the American building, will be carried out on a much smaller scale. J. R. Innes, secretary of the S.P.C.A., stated that he has received assurances that the time has come when local friends of animals are sufficiently interested in the cause of the society, to approve of the budget which will be voted for 1926.

The structure will be of stone, and will have facilities for the scientific treatment and care of sick horses and lost and suffering cats and dogs. Offices for a staff of veterinary assistants, sorting rooms where unclaimed and ailing animals will be held when they are brought to the home, stables and killing station will be features of the building.

PRINCE OF WALES' RESIDENCE

The news that the Prince of Wales is likely to take up his residence at Marlborough House when in London, has been received with genuine satisfaction by the press and public. At the same time the announcement is taken as an intimation that the heir to the throne is about to settle down to the performance of those many social and state duties which fall to him as the King's eldest son, duties which for nearly ten years have been deferred, first by the participation of his Royal Highness in the war and since then by his extensive travels abroad.

Whether there exists any connection between the contemplated chance of residence and the matrimonial intentions of the Prince is also a matter of lively speculation. In any event, Marlborough House is regarded as a far more desirable throne residence for the heir to the throne than is York House, St. James Palace, where he has made his home for several years during his brief stays in London.

Moreover, Marlborough House will ever be associated in the minds of Londoners with the Prince of Wales. For nearly forty years it was the London residence of the late King Edward VII. when he bore the title of Prince of Wales, and it is said that he openly expressed his regret that his accession to the throne necessitated his removal to Buckingham Palace. After his death Queen Alexandra returned to Marlborough House and to the familiar surroundings and fond memories of many happy years.

Marlborough House was built by Sarah, the first and greatest Duchess of Marlborough, on the gardens of an old friary. A stipulation in the original lease was to the effect that the friary gardens should not be built over. For this reason the garden, although in London's very heart, remains to this day spacious and productive. Sarah of Marlborough had quarrelled bitterly with her architects when the mansion was about to be built, and it is said that this singular woman completed the plans herself and personally directed their carrying out. At any rate, Marlborough House is one of the most admirably constructed houses in London.

The Marlboroughs dwelt in Marlborough House from the days of the great Duchess down to the first decade of the nineteenth century, when the successive heavy losses of the then Duke and of his son, Lord Blandford, caused the family to part with it, in order that Blenheim might be saved. Royalty at once leased the house for Prince Leopold, husband of the ill-fated daughter of George IV.

King George had intended it as a residence for his daughter, Princess Charlotte, but the Princess, who died in childbirth at Claremont the same year, never lived in it. Her widower, Prince Leopold, made it his residence for several years, until he became King of the Belgians.

In 1831 the Queen Dowager Adelaide went to live there. Some thirty years later Queen Victoria assigned it to the newly married Prince and Princess of Wales (later King Edward and Queen Alexandra) as their popular town establishment, and such it remained for nearly forty years. On this occasion the structure was much enlarged, many portions of it entirely rebuilt, and its interior renovated to meet modern requirements. Since then it has been regarded as the most comfortable of all the royal residences in London.

It has been said that Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, after her marriage to the present Duke of Marlborough, from whom she has since been divorced, conceived the ambition of winning back Marlborough House from royal control, and placing it once more in the hands of the Marlboroughs. Nothing, however, came of the project.

Colds Are Not Necessary Evils

Observance of One Fundamental Rule of Health Protects Against Them

Whether one catches cold easily is largely a question of physical condition. If the general vitality is low, resistance to disease is weak and at such a time a cold is easy to contract and difficult to check.

Constipation is frequently the cause of such a state of health, with its attendant listlessness, biliousness, headaches and a general lack of vitality. Poisons from the waste matter that remains behind after improper, irregular bowel elimination are picked up by the blood and carried to every part of the body. They weaken your resistance to disease.

Thousands of people who have suffered from self-poisoning in this way have found that Nujol, the internal lubricant makes bowel elimination sure and easy.

Nujol softens the waste matter and permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles. Nujol can be taken for any length of time with no ill effects.

If you take cold easily, ask your druggist for Nujol to-day—and remember, look for the name "Nujol" in red on both bottle and package.
