"There goes," sighed the doctor, "the only woman that I ever loved."
"Why didn't you marry her?"
"Couldn't afford to. She's my best patient."

"That would look nice at our party next Saturday," she said, hoping her husband would buy it for her. "Yes," agreed Mr. Smythe. "Why

"What's the matter, mum," he asked, "ain't you got a penny?"

"Good-morning, doctor," he said, as he sat down. "You remember, five years ago you cured my rheumatism and you told me at all costs to avoid dampness?"

Haggard Individual: "I am ruined. I'm going to end it all. Have you to take a bath now?"

Mrs. Barker: "So your boy is to be a professor, is he? Then he must be making good progress in his study."
