A Dress for a Dance

"Everybody else has them, and I can't go—and all your work for nothing, Ellie, too. Oh, dear."

Your Uncle Henry came in and tried to cheer her up. "Why don't you put a barrel-hoop under the skirt, Sally? That would make it look right."

He was only joking, of course, but she took it seriously. She found a big molasses puncheon down cellar, and made Henry take the hoop off for her. It made the skirt short, but I put another ruffle on the bottom so her ankles wouldn't show. Of course she couldn't sit down, but, as she said, why should she? She wanted to dance all evening.

As Johnny had the croup I had to stay up with him all night, and after the dance I went to her room to hear about it. She had taken off the taffeta dress and stood before the mirror in her white petticoats, with her red-gold hair tumbling over her shoulders.

I whispered, "You're almost pretty, Sally."

She smiled. "An Irishman there told me I was as lovely as the Queen of Heaven."

I didn't know that he would be your grandfather, but I replied, "Old Snarky doesn't think the Irish are respectable."

Your grandmother giggled.

ROUGE ET NOIR

: Scoop by "Snoop" :

Well, Salomey and I had a wonderful time at the dance last weekend. 'Course the smell was pretty bad if you got near Arnie and his corsage! All in all, it was a good evening. And by now the boys must know where they stand—but for the life of me I don't know how some of the co-eds got those dates. Optimists for the future, or just taking that poster "This is your chance, girls" to heart?

Terry seemed perfectly happy to be shepherded about the place by a certain airman. She's got the right system—Let your Fall Formal import come early—and distance is no object.

* * * *

Were we surprised when the bell rang. Mark it up under new and interesting experiences.

* * * *

If one girl can't come out, there are others—and even with the same name too, eh Busby? Still two nights in succession? Tut, tut.

* * * *

I told you to watch for it. Morrison Mill—or Mills, in the news again.

* * * *

Bud doesn't believe in sitting home and doing nothing—chooses Charlotte street as the basis to help him forget.

* * * *

Looked pretty fishy to me—don't know that it took nearly an hour and a half to walk from the Hill to Lannans. Must be a new "short-cut".

* * * *

Do you feel like being Mary?

Well, I'm not Boulton am I—or am I?

* * * *

That's quite a problem Dave. Put them behind your back and choose one.

* * * *

Sammy believes in a Normal date, but the smell of that flower was far from normal.

* * * *

Freshman Paul is doing some heavy Wading.

* * * *

The Sophettes taught the Freshettes how to bow, but Dot prefers to Neil.

That's all for now. I'm too busy trying to check up on all these Fall Formal imports for any more today. There's millions of them!

Love and kisses,

sNOOP.
