

Blood Donors

taken from each person visiting the Blood Bank.

Due to the small number of students in the different faculties of the Senior and Junior classes it has been possible to cancel lectures for their class on a particular Tuesday and so take the whole class on the one day. However due to the size of the Freshman and Sophomore classes it has been found impossible to carry out this system and hence these students are picked more or less at random. In the case of a student, who is anxious to give blood on a day for which a certain class has been selected it can be arranged for him to come also on the same day.

Whether or not the Blood Bank is to be as successful this year as last is the responsibility of the student body. It is up to each student on the campus to see that support for this worthwhile undertaking is forthcoming.

Coeds to Work

lish its individuality. Last year arm bands were worn, which consisted of a red cross, with the red letters C.R.C.C. on a white background. This buying of uniforms was a factor which weighed heavily against the continuance of the Corps, for the complete uniform would cost approximately ten dollars, a price many girls felt they could not afford.

The motion whether the Corps should go on or not, was put to the vote. An almost unanimous decision for its abolition was returned but with the understanding that the girls should undertake some other war work.

In line with this thought, Professor Argue, who is in charge of the Blood Bank, spoke to the girls Thursday, Oct. 14, giving them an estimate of what would be required from them should they volunteer to help there. He pointed out that the work would be sheer drudgery but that it was also highly important. The work would consist of washing bottle, cleaning and sharpening needles, washing tubing, keeping records and a variety of other small jobs that had to be done. By the girls volunteering to do this work, the technicians and paid staff would be freed to go on with their important tasks.

The co-eds have decided to make helping in the Blood Bank their part of this war. A schedule is being drawn up and the girls will work in two's and three's, morning, noon and even nights. Thus the C.R.C.C. has been disbanded in favor of a truly essential work.

Capt. John B. Ferris, 27, O.C. the Canadian Army Woodcraft School, a graduate in Forestry of the University of New Brunswick read the caption on a picture appearing in The Montreal Standard during the summer. Although none of the present student body knows Capt. Ferris, the fact that he is a U.N.B. grad and is commanding officer of this specialized training centre — the only one in Canada — is most significant.

While going Up-the-Hill, he was considered "a good student" according to both Prof. Gibson and Prof. Flieger, the Forestry profs; while Major Jones informed us that he was adjutant of the C.O.T.C. contingent during his senior year.

Capt. Ferris came from England to take up residence here, and knowing Canada to have great natural resources in the form of its forests, wisely chose to take Forestry at this university both, the best of choices.

Another instance proving, "the best grads of all are from U.N.B. (Carnegie) Hall."

The place, the spring on the Odell property . . . the time, Wednesday night . . . the people, Foresters . . . the reason, a barbecue . . . the perfect set-up. By way of explanation: Pete Johnson, frosh Forester, was on a hunting trip over Thanksgiving weekend and his party brought home the bacon in the form of venison. An invitation was extended to the Forestry Association to dine on the royal repast and needless to say, "it" was gobbled up. Well, to make a long story shorter, a good time was had by all.

What I Did

I first started working on Puparia, things were not particularly busy, but after the temperature was raised (which incidentally cooked us too) the Puparia began to emerge and I mean emerge. When we started getting a thousand a day I decided it might be wise to take up residence in the Incubator. However it wasn't necessary as about half of the Lab. came to our rescue with gratifying results.

People always lend the variety which makes life interesting. Those with whom I worked this summer were no exception. They were the best even if they did think the chief products of New Brunswick were "moose" and "herring".

the University.

Medical students in their first and second years, provided that they are pursuing the accelerated courses toward their degree will be required to take one hour of training per week in subjects common to all arms and two hours per week on courses which have special value to R.C.A.M.C. personnel. This will be followed by a two week period in camp. When this is to take place has not as yet been made clear.

Dear Reader

have in past years. This article also stated that the girls would be willing to walk to these dances in their evening clothes.

Since this article appeared we have heard of three distinct discussions on this subject which took place in three distinct parts of town and by different groups of students. The result in each case was the same—that the formals should be held as large informal dances in the gym, no tux, no evening dress, just a good band and a good time.

At most of the larger Upper Canadian Colleges formals have been cut out or limited to one a year. Can it be that we have too much pride, too much sense of tradition to break with these petty social affairs while our brothers and former students of this college are scattered in all the four corners of the world fighting hard so that we can continue, uninterrupted, our technical training?

Why doesn't the War Effort Committee wake up? Why don't they collect the money saved by having informal formals and invest it in their fund? A speaker at the Freshman Reception told the Freshmen that the only chance they would have to aid the War Effort would be by giving blood. Formal dances are one of the reasons for his statement; there are lots more.

If you have any opinions on anything that concerns the students or the University, let us have them, just address them to "Who" and give them to any of the members of the news staff of this paper. We'll see that they're given an airing.

Hope that you will give the above thought some consideration and some action.

Yours,
WHO.

Their welcome rings out true;
When others pass you onward,
You'll find they'll stick by you.
