

sweet sorrow

This is the last regular Brunswickan of 1962-1963. We of the staff see this final issue pass with mixed feelings. On one hand, we are happy to see the work done so that we can begin our studies; on the other, those of us who are leaving have a sense of sadness. For us, it marks the end of one of the most rewarding extracurricular activities at university.

This year's paper saw some radical changes over last year's edition. Some of our features and news drew violent opposition, but the paper as a whole had all the students scrambling for their weekly copy. We had our troubles at times, and towards the end we had some financial trouble. Nevertheless, the paper always got out . . . even if late . . . and the tradition of ninety-five years went unbroken.

This is the oldest continuous student publication in Canada, and among the oldest in North America. It is also one of the most conservative (in policy if not in politics) college newspapers. We are not nearly as sensational as most of the other papers across Canada, nor do we engage as much in sex and religion. Of course, our editors have a longer stay in office too.

Despite our basic conservatism, the editors have this year taken up many issues of interest to the students. We had some differences with the Building Committee, the India Association, and the SRC. But we have done more than that. The majority of the causes which the Brunswickan has sponsored have been positive. We rescued the Red n' Black from the brink of folding . . . we suggested a trailer park on campus . . . we suggested a term weekend about now . . . we ran a series on the coming election which we were kind of proud of, because we were more impartial than we would have liked to have been.

All in all, we on the staff are quite proud of volume 95 of the Brunswickan. A lot of work and a lot of late hours have gone into it . . . and a fair amount of honest mistakes. Our marks may suffer, but we think that it is worth it. We hope that you think so too.

And now, on a more personal note . . . a series of thank-yous. This year-end review is compliments of Unipress, our publishers. To Unipress, and to General Manager André Hadamar, we owe a special vote of thanks for assisting us to continue publishing during our financial difficulties. Mr. Hadamar, Clayton Merrill, and the entire production staff at Unipress have been of invaluable assistance to the success of the paper this year.

On campus, sincere thanks to all our contributors and workers, from typists and proof-readers on up. Without you there could be no Brunswickan. Special thanks to Ron McBride of the UNB Public Relations Department for his advice and assistance. And finally, a heartfelt thank you to the Brunswickan readers for their confidence in us.

Good luck to all in the torturous weeks of examinations. May a pleasant summer in the sun put you in shape for next year's edition of "The Voice of UNB". Good fortune to all of you.
