

Hijacker wants to come to Fredericton

A young American was extremely annoyed today when his request for safe-passage to the University of New Brunswick was denied by Canadian Transport Ministers. Despite his promises to destroy the VIA RAIL train with dynamite and other unspecified explosive, Fred Sams was told that the Government would be pleased to get rid of that train, anyway.

Sams had boarded the train in Montreal holding twelve Waterloo University students at gunpoint as hostages. The students, unaffected by this intrusion continued to party, happy that they were given a longer period away from school. Sams then demanded that the train take him straight to Fredericton where he has wanted to go all his life.

In an Exclusive interview, Sams confided that he had posters of some of the most crucial spots in Fredericton including the Princess Margaret Bridge, the Crotchmo, the Playhouse and the three Tim Hortons stores in the city. Sams says, he has always wanted to visit this city ever since he was a child and the urge became too much for him on his eighteenth birthday.

Action shots of the hijack by photographer Pearl Locker. Hijacker's glasses are circled.

He knows all three Tim Horton stores in the city (oops.)

The stance taken by Transport Minister drew great protest from the general public but he remained adamant that his real reason for denying the hijacker any concessions was that playing soft to such scum was always the worst policy. He denied allegations that he has been busy trying to see the end of VIA RAIL and that this action was a part of the plot in that dictation.

Our reporters are now on the train with Sams who has been having tremendous fun with the Waterloo University students. Our last report is that Sams wants to go to Waterloo University instead. The Fredericton Tourist Board has sent a representative to the train to try and talk Sams out of that decision. We will keep you posted on further developments.

Celebration was the order for the day as one student at the University of No Brains (UNB) conquered what may be the most difficult obstacle he'll ever have to face. No, he hasn't attended every Campus Entertainment event this year - it's something even more stupendous.

At approximately 6:03 pm on Wednesday April 14, Salmonella Ptomain finished his Beefer Food meal ticket while still standing.

"I feel great!" stated Mr. Ptomain, who not only is the first student to complete the meal ticket with no medical difficulties, but is also the first to survive 3 years with Beefer's prestigious 19-meal plan.

Mr. Ptomain, a biology student, says the secret of his success is not to sneeze or look at the food. He first listens for any signs of life, then quickly stabs the food (just in case). "The tasting itself is the hardest part," he says. "I just imagine I'm eating somewhere really great like MacDonalds."

In congratulations, Beefer Foods has awarded Mr. Ptomain a life-time meal plan. In addition, a plaque will be erected in his honour and hung in MacGaggle Hall.

Medical tests will be conducted on Mr Ptomain to discover just how this strange phenomena has occurred. Although in perfect health, he will receive rehabilitation during the summer months for early signs of french fry withdrawal.

Says Ptomain:
"I JUST IMAGINE I AM EATING SOMEWHERE REALLY GREAT"

Testimony of a Beefer Foods survivor.

Ptomain gets his award.

A FELINE SHOCK

Cat electrocutes elderly woman

A woman was electrocuted last Sunday when her cat, who had just been struck by lightning, jumped into her bathtub. The cat, whose name is being withheld, was known for taking baths with his owner. The cat's veterinarian testified that his previous owner was Jacques Custodian, a famous marine biologist, and this was how his water fetish began. The vet also explained to police that the cat was experiencing a term called "feline envy" as he was neutered just two months ago.

Investigators stated that the electrical storm began early in the evening shortly after supper. "We've never seen something like this before. The cat should have died immediately. We're still not sure how it got back into the house and got up to the bathroom!" Foul play was ruled out.

MUTANT TURTLES INVADE UNB

Last week thousands of snapping turtles from the various swamps around New Brunswick came to the Fredericton campus of UNB. Experts say that these turtles are very intelligent and the reason for that is that they feed on dormant brain cells. The fact that there is an excess of dormant brain cells in the minds of students at UNB may explain why they were attracted here in the first place. Already 25 students have been attacked and eaten by the vicious turtle infantry, you may be next.

Although most of the mutant turtles are of a warring nature some are on a mission of peace. The foremost of those peaceful turtles is called Turtle-one, who is by far the oldest and wisest of all the turtles known to man. He or it as the case may be has predicted, using various material here at UNB, that the next ice age will occur within a year of this date. So you better go out and buy yourself one very big snow shovel.

EX
V

Just v
had be traditio
Friday a Crotchm
of crea
"Chicke
comple
clubbing
"I d happene manag associat
confide
star rep
don't kn
I was ju
Street
Wings,
She des began s then on Vitrioli
bought chicken
"She
mouth,
wings,
got!" C Vitriol
recover
the fir Chalm
contact Vitriol
commen
King P
he had deplete
with th
and the breadc
building reported
care ab
she ju
manag
the fin
her anx
with th
receiv
entry comple
chicken

Just v
had be traditio
Friday a Crotchm
of crea
"Chicke
comple
clubbing
"I d happene
manag
associat
confide
star rep
don't kn
I was ju
Street
Wings,
She des
began s
then on Vitrioli
bought
chicken
"She
mouth,
wings,
got!" C Vitriol
recover
the fir Chalm
contact Vitriol
commen
King P
he had
deplete
with th
and the breadc
building
reported
care ab
she ju
manag
the fin
her anx
with th
receiv
entry comple
chicken