

A Day in the Life ...

of a Science student

By Blair T. Sawler

Glenn Murray is a third year Science student. He says that he enjoys what he is studying - Biology. Why, you ask? He says that it is because "you get to wear these nifty coats, and play with bugs, and basically we study anything that moves or breathes."

A normal day for Glenn is getting to campus around 8:30 in the morning. He studies in the Science Library until his 10:30 class: Bio-Chemistry.

"Boy is it hard", exclaims Glenn. It must be, he says that he spends his next two hours trying to "recover from it."

AT 1:30 Glenn has his Mycology (or fungus, as Glenn puts it) class. Apparently Mycology is pretty exciting, because when he started talking about his 2:30 lab he has after the class, his eyes lit up.

"We get to study fungus and fish!" He said as he bit into a sandwich.

Some people are worried about getting fungus poisoning, but Glenn said that if he did catch it, he would "consider it an honour."

Why would anybody want to study fungus? "Well", said Glenn, "you've never lived until you've studied fungus."

If he doesn't have his "fungus" lab at 2:30, he has his Parasitology lab, which also runs until 5:30.

Glenn explained that his most frustrating experience in this lab was "trying to find a parasite in a fish. It took me five hours, and all I found was a little one! The most interesting lab I had was trying to find a spore that kills house flies, and I found a fly that was killed by one."

On Wednesday nights, Glenn has a class that is almost a normal one, Economics. It sounds like a strange course for someone who studies fungus and enjoys it. Glenn explains, "I took it because I thought it was a good idea at the time."

If it sounds like it's a hard faculty, you're right. "It ain't easy", comments Glenn, "but I do have time to play badminton, study, curl, study and study!"

Glenn continues, "I study and work this hard so that when I grow up I can be just like Dr. Crowe." Whispering he says "can you tell that I can use some extra marks?"

If you're a Freshman, and you haven't discovered how hard you are going to be working, or you are considering switching to science, then Glenn has something to tell you: "No matter how hard you study, it isn't enough."
