Bee disappearances linked to al Qaeda

by Commodore Balls

When California beekeeper Marvin Giddybeaver began to notice his bees were vanishing, he immediately suspected a new disease, pollutant or pesticide. According to a press release from the Department of Homeland Security released yesterday, however, the reality is much, much more terrifying.

The recent disappearance of thousands of bee colonies across the United States has been linked to an al Qaeda plot to destroy America.

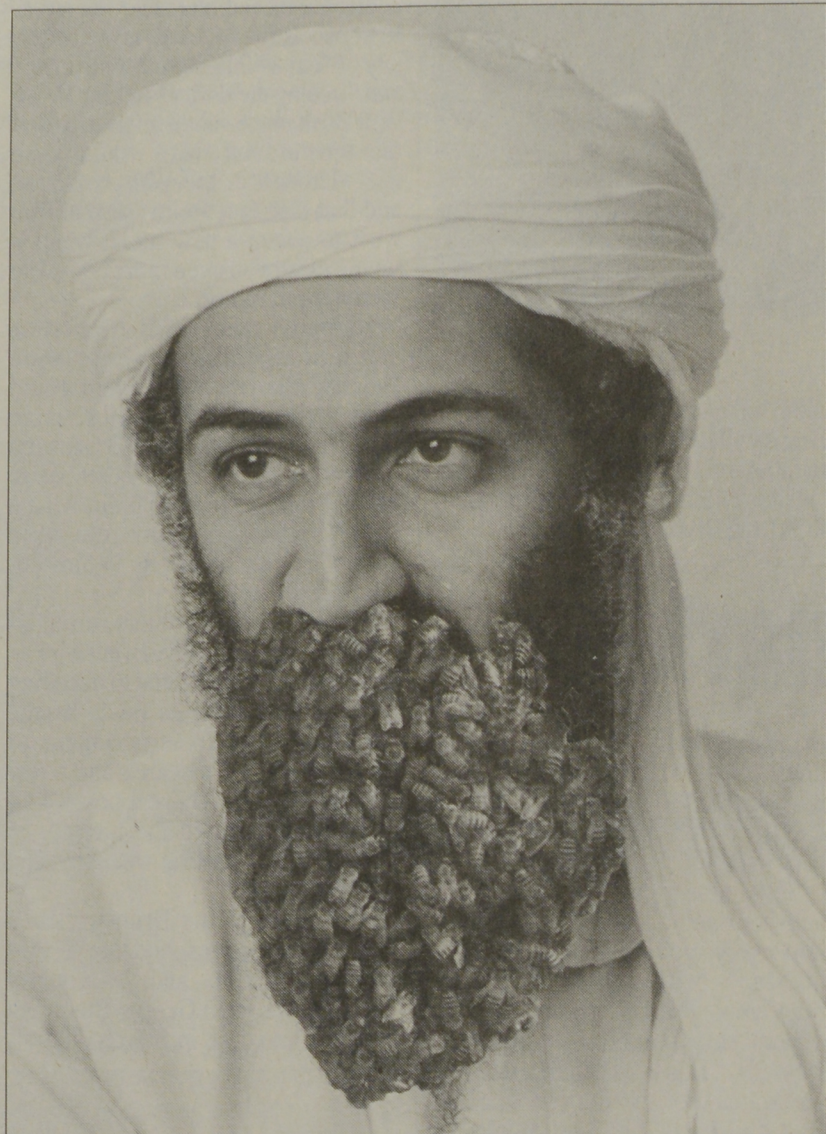

The primary objective of this latest threat, the report indicates, is to deprive American agri-business of the bees it needs to pollinate different kinds of flowering crops -- including apples, cherries, pears, almonds, and various berries.

The estimated value of U.S. crops pollinated entirely by honey bees could be as high as $15 billion.

"The damage these barbarians will cause if we allow them to carry out this diabolical scheme," says apiologist and terrorism expert Dr. Chandra Eskimotrain, "will be of a scale Americans have never before witnessed."

"This could make 9/11 look like 9/10 or even 9/6 -- you know, those good days before the bad things happened."

How exactly the terrorists have been luring bees from their hives remains unclear, but initial threat assessments point to the use of genetically modified super-flowers grown in Iran and parts of Taliban-controlled Afghanistan.

U.S. President George W. Bush addressed the nation this morning, reassuring citizens that the government and military were escalating efforts to prevent further bee colony destruction and bring the perpetrators of the crimes to justice.

"We will not rest until the last bee-keeper cell is found," he stated. "We will not rest until these cowards have paid for what they've done. You're either with us, or with the bees. As far as America is concerned, bees represent a new Axis of Evil in the world... right Cheney?"

President Bush also reminded Americans that they must be vigilant -- or the consequences could be even more perilous.

"Because of our efforts to stop Osama bin Laden from acquiring new-kyoolar weapons, he has instructed his lieutenants to focus on America's bee supply. He is not trying to build A-bombs -- he is now constructing B-bombs. B-bombs are the WMD of the new millennium. Also, bees tried to kill my dad."

Officials in the U.S. and Canada are warning citizens to be vigilant, and beekeepers across the continent are being investigated for ties to terrorist organizations.

Fredericton police chief Dale Roombie reminds residents not to approach suspicious-looking individuals.

"If you encounter any person wearing a bee-suit or other meshed covering," he urges, "they should be considered armed and dangerous. Do not attempt to apprehend or detain the suspect -- call 911 immediately and take shelter inside an insect-proof building or residence."

Most importantly, President Bush noted in his speech, "is that people must continue to live and shop for sweet-tasting food items as usual."

"If we stop drinking soda every day and buying things at Costco, then the terrorists have won already. We must stand up to those who hate America's freedom... er, beedom. Texas."

SUB staff get Tasers starting this fall

by AC Joltington

SUB staff will be packing a little more heat when the students return in the fall. During the summer, a dozen Tasers will be purchased and all staff will be trained in their use. According to SUB Director Kin No-Risk, the move is mainly due to the university's aim to reduce violence on campus.

"We've had a lot of violence on campus during the past year," says No-Risk, "and, frankly, my staff and I aren't equipped to handle the situations that often arise late at night. So now, whenever there's an incident, no matter how small, the perp's going to get a nasty surprise... to the tune of 10,000 volts OF JUSTICE."

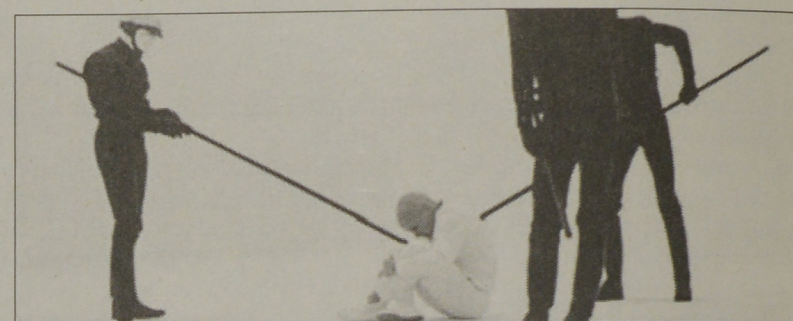

Despite several deaths in Canada recently connected to the use of the controversial devices, No-Risk isn't concerned. "It's a no-risk situation," said No-Risk. "These people are young and healthy -- not a pacemaker among them. Shouldn't be a problem," he continued.

No-Risk expects the devices will be mostly used on the weekends when there are more people loitering around. "We expect to use them mainly on drunk people, skater punks, rogue SU execs, and PCP-crazed Dungeons & Dragons players in the Blue Room," he said.

"It's shocking," said SU Elect President Brad Melonhead. "I can't believe that the university would sanction these weapons in the hands of its employees."

No-Risk explained that each member of his staff would watch an intensive training DVD on the aiming of the devices. "I don't expect any real problems," offered No-Risk. "We'll probably see a few problems while we get the program up and running, but it's not like my staff are just in it to see people twitch. Well, except for Steve -- he's one sadistic motherfucker."

No-Risk finished the interview with a wry grin then walked away laughing maniacally. He is reportedly working on a top-secret method to combine five Tasers with a rail gun and a shrink ray. Our reporter was sent to No-Risk's office for comment but never returned.

New super drug killing our kids

by D. David Davidson

What do Britney Spears, Lindsay Lohan and Paris Hilton all have in common? You might be tempted to take the easy answer: they're spoiled spotlight hogs who have no idea how to behave in public because they weren't raised properly.

Look below the surface and you'll find a far more disturbing answer. All three are addicted to a terrible new drug from Eastern Europe called "cake." The other thing that they have in common is that they're probably all dead by now.

"Cake," "silly treasure," "monkey's jackknife," or "trinket" as it's variously known, first appeared at Prague boon raves back in 1996. Unsuspecting partiers, looking for a cheap, new high were quick to buy up initial supplies of this "made-up" drug... so called because it's made up of chemicals instead of plants.

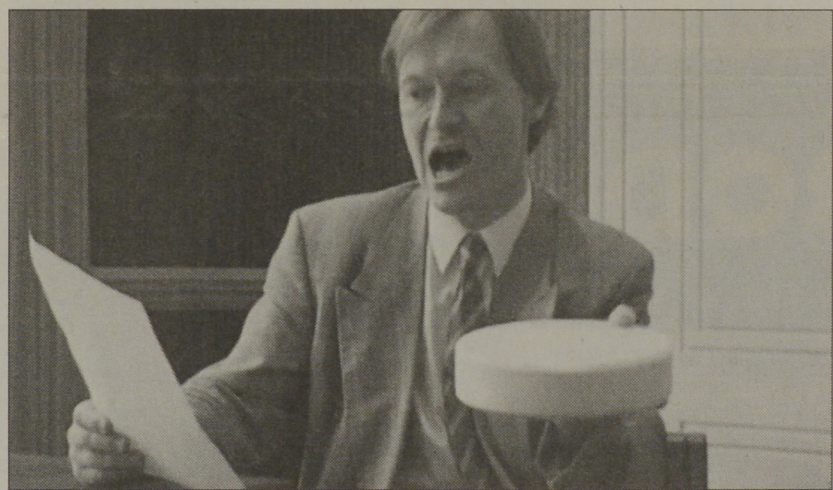

The entire city of Prague was hooked on it within a matter of days. By the end of the next week, half the population was dead. The drug's effects are ghastly. Cake can make you cry all the water out of your body or vomit so hard that you'll expel your pelvic bone through your mouth. Extreme cases have been known to turn people completely invisible.

The drug didn't stop at Prague, however. It soon spread to the cities of Budapest and Vienna before doubling back for a weekend in Kiev. It made a second stop in Prague to meet up with some old friends then hopped over to Warsaw. From there, it infiltrated Western Europe. It didn't take long for naïve American celebrities to get swept along in the cake craze. Spears, Lohan and Hilton are now paying the price.

"It's terrible," commented Spears' estranged husband, Kevin Federline. "She spends millions on these elaborate cake parties for her and her friends. She once hired a sculptor to carve her likeness in ham just so she could argue with it while she was high on cake. What a disgrace."

This scourge was originally revealed in the British documentary series Brass Eye by journalist Desmond Morris in 1997. He took a pre-emptive approach, inviting British politicians to speak out against cake abuse. Thanks to his pioneering efforts, England is largely cake-free.

British MP David Amess speaks against "cake" in Brass Eye.

Unfortunately, Morris did not survive to enjoy the fruit of his labour. The hero died from a tragic cake overdose in 1996. The drug is so powerful that it can kill you before you even come into contact with it.

Cake is a bi-sterile cradabolic anphetamoid. One pill is extremely large. Anyone ingesting it risks suffocation and even decapitation. The drug needs up to four days to take full effect, depending on the number of languages the user speaks. Once the drug's effects begin, they never stop. One cake pill will get a user high for the rest of their life. It does so by activating the area of the brain that regulates time perception. It's known as Shatner's Bassoon. The only effective treatment for cake addiction is to get the user to swallow a live cheetah. Everyone who has tried cake is dead.

There is little hope for Spears, Lohan and Hilton. By the time this article goes to print, they will all be dead. This is the unfortunate reality we live in... one so twisted and perverse that our children will forsake their futures for an evening's trip, a walk down the silly treasure, or a triple-sod leap through the cake hoop.

Parents, know the signs of cake addiction: your children's necks will swell up to the size of ugly beach balls. This condition is known as "Czech neck." Your children will also smell extremely bad. Watch them vigilantly day and night. Cake doesn't care how old they are. Every pill has a radar built-in that detects children. It can find them even if you bury them deep underground. Your children will never be safe again. Even in space.

Jedi: The next great threat?

by Ben Ulrich

With Spider-Man recent disappearance into the underground to escape the Superhero Registration Act and avoid authorities for whatever part he played in Sharkey's murder, the world is safe from one of the biggest criminal menaces of all-time.

People across the globe have been celebrating the wall-crawler's disappearance and have started to believe that the streets are safe again.

Those people are wrong. There is a threat lurking out there that is even greater than Spider-Man himself, and while they haven't arrived yet, their destructive presence could be felt any day now. They are the Jedi, and they could be the greatest threat the Earth has ever faced.

Wielding swords of pure energy, referred to as "lightsabers," and possessing mystical skills including telekinesis, enhanced senses and physical abilities, and telepathic powers such as mind control, the Jedi could easily wreak havoc on the Earth and its peaceful inhabitants.

"These Jedi could be the worst thing we've ever faced," said President George Bush. "Worse than al Qaeda and the Taliban combined. These guys are even worse than dinosaurs, dragons, or a homosexual wedding." Cheney and I have every confidence that Superman will soon be here to protect freedom."

For now the Jedi claim to be peaceful. Master Yoda insists that "harmless we are, yes, hmmm."

But are the Jedi really peaceful? Or is the serene image they project just a front, masking their true intentions?

Representatives from Emperor Palpatine's office aren't convinced of the Jedi's peaceful image.

"Sure the Jedi pretend to be peaceful and all about balance, but let's look at the facts. Rogue Jedi plotted to take over the Senate and seize control of the Republic. Luckily the Emperor was there to stop them and guide his Empire to new heights."

Famed defender of the Empire Lord Darth Vader, a former Jedi who recognized the evils of the Order, is a staunch opponent of the Jedi.

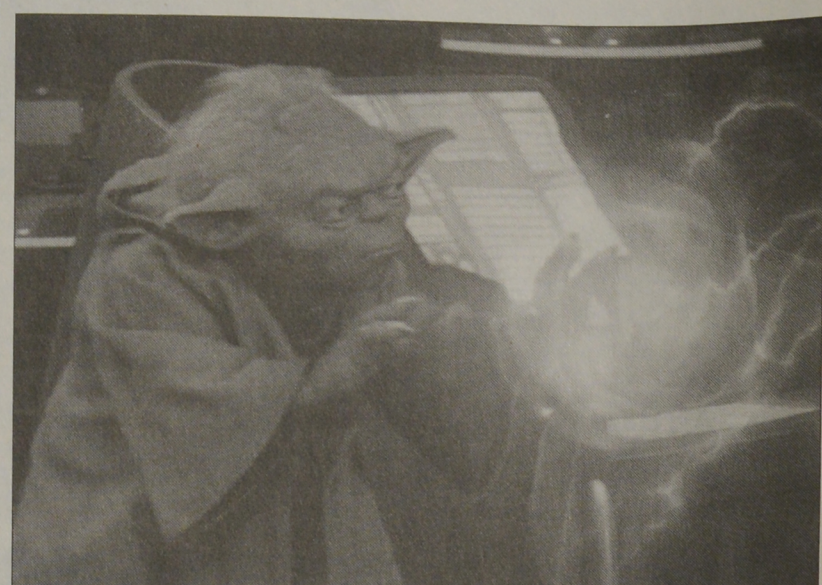

"The Jedi have taken everything from me. My wife, my children... They even forced me to wear this ridiculous suit. Do you know how hard it is to eat or take a dump in this thing? Nobody understands my pain."

In the midst of Vader's rant he demonstrated the power of this mysterious Force, shattering objects around the room as a hooded figure whispered, "Use your anger. Good, good."

If a decent guy like Vader can do that much damage with the Force, imagine what these irresponsible Jedi could do if left unchecked.

Hopefully President Bush's letter to the Fortress of Solitude is answered and Superman will come to protect us from this new menace.

"The only way to defeat these monsters is through the use of the Dark Side," stated Emperor Palpatine in a speech before the Republican National Committee. He encouraged supporters to "give in to your hatred... and get out to vote. Cheney 2008!"
