

BARACK ROCKS MAINE

Democratic presidential hopeful Barack Obama was on the campaign trail in Bangor, Maine, on Saturday afternoon, speaking to a full house of more than 7,000 supporters at the Bangor Auditorium. Massive crowds lined the streets, with thousands being turned away, as backers gathered to hear Obama's message of hope and change for America. Before addressing those inside, however, Obama spoke briefly with those who braved the cold but did not get in. The appearance came just one day before the Maine Democratic Caucuses, which Obama decidedly won over opponent Hillary Clinton. Clinton was also in Maine on Saturday, holding a town hall style meeting on the campus of the University of Maine in Orono. The victory in Maine was key for Obama, pulling him within 27 delegates of Clinton in his campaign to win the Democratic nomination. Bruns editors who were at the rally share their opinions on page 6.

increasing in Atlantic Canada, therefore so does the competition.

"Every year, we've tried to look at what we've done in the past; what's worked and what hasn't. I really like this program myself. A lot of people have given us positive feedback and I really enjoy the slogan that is attached to it. I could even see us doing something similar in the future," said Duguay.

The slogan itself reads "Only One U," which for the marketing and communication teams held a double meaning.

"Its main message is to show students that we care about individuality and there is a sense of warmth attached. We have smaller class sizes as you get up in the years as well as getting to know professors one-on-one. These are things you can't necessarily get all over the country. The other meaning is that there is a play on the "U" meaning UNB," he said.

CAMPAIGN."

—SCOTT DUGUAY

Most of what Duguay has heard has been positive, and he, as well as others, is excited to see the results of the campaign.

"I'm looking forward to seeing what that (campaign) means for enrollment in the future, but right now we are just having fun with it."

The campaign began January 28 and goes until the end of March, with the Facebook contest ending March 21.

Somalian refugee speaks

SHOUT UNB to raise funds for EGART Relief and Development Agency

by Brad Conley

Mohamednur Madowe is a Somali refugee. About six years ago, Mohamednur found himself stuck in a country in which a civil war was taking place. As a result of the situation in Somalia, he decided to come to Canada for safety reasons and for better opportunities. After a long and drawn-out process, he arrived in Canada.

Although he left Somalia, he certainly did not forget about what was going on in the country, and in his hometown of Dinsoor. Since moving to Canada, Mohamednur created a Non-Governmental Organization (NGO) based right here in Fredericton. The NGO called "EGART Relief and Development Agency" is working day in and day out to give back to his hometown. The goal of the organization is to raise the funds to build three schools in and around his native community. He holds this goal close to his heart, especially since the educational system in Somalia was lost as a result of the civil war.

SHOUT UNB has decided to help Mohamednur achieve his goal. As a result, the SHOUT UNB campus club will be hosting an event with any funds raised going to help Mohamednur and his organization. The event will take place Monday, February 18 at 7 pm in Tilley Hall. Here, Mohamednur will speak to an audience about his journey. This should be an extremely captivating presentation, one which will help raise awareness of what took place in Somalia, and the rough times that Mohamednur had to endure.

Although admission is free, SHOUT UNB will be accepting donations for Mohamednur's charity.
