MELANCHOLY.

The rising sun, for me in vain,
 Arrays in gold the mountain's crest,
 And, gleaming o'er the humid plain,
 With crimson tinges ocean's breast.
 His spreading beams, tho' rob'd in light,
 No more their wonted joys bestow,
 They cannot chase the "fateful night,"
 That clouds my soul with endless woe.
 The promise of my youth is fled,
 The life blood curdles round my heart,
 The opening buds of hope are shed,
 And death alone can ease impart.
 Ah! why did Heav'n impress my mind,
 With feelings still to rapture true,
 Yet leave unquitting fate to bind
 Affections gems with funeral yew.
 The starry eve, the new born day,
 Alike have lost their power to charm,
 Nor e'en can beauty's proud display,
 Again this frozen bosom warm,
 Clo'd is my heart to all but her,
 Who first awoke its slumbering fires,
 Whose image all my thoughts prefer,
 And will, 'till life itself expires.
