Drunkenness A Crime.

The legislature of Minnesota has just enacted a law making drunkenness a crime. Strange, isn't it, that a legislature which would vote down county option, and refuse the people an opportunity to vote whether or not they would prohibit criminal making should go to the extent of declaring that the drunkard is a criminal? That is it, gentlemen, you have done it now, authorized the traffic, and fine and imprison the victim! According to Victor Hugo when nature made a mouse, she said, hold on, there! I have made a mistake. Then she made a cat to catch the mouse. So that a mouse plus a cat is nature perfected. So we authorize saloons and then fine the drunkards. That is to say, licensed traffic plus fines for the victims is ideal temperance legislation! Could men more plainly have declared the iniquity of the traffic, or the need of prohibition? Of course this law can be executed! It is easy to fine and lock up the poor moneyless victim of drink; but the bloated saloonist, never! And so we go on adding insult to injury. We take the poor man's money for drink (and the price of license is in it)and then when he is drunk we take the rest of his money and his time from wife and children, and call it reform.

Do we doubt that drunkenness is a crime? Not at all. But can we doubt that if it be a crime, it must also be a greater crime to make drunk? "Woe to him that putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips that maketh him drunken also." To enact that drunkenness is a crime would be an admirable thing as supplementary to prohibition; for then we should be in a condition ourselves to consistently enforce such a law. But never, while we authorize the traffic.—Methodist Herald

Need Little Ones Be Ashamed?

The New York Voice has tens of thousands of subscribers whose subscriptions expire this week. It announces to these—"To compel you to renew, we make you an irresistible offer. If you will renew at once we will give you for nothing Josiah Allen's Wife's best book. This is one of the livest and best selling of our $2,00 books." The plain sense of this is, that to secure 1,000 subscribers already on the list, they are willing to give away $2,000 worth of books. It shews two things—while the transactiou is legitimate enough—that the Voice has been so heavily subsidized by the public as to make it very rich; and that its riches it is now compelled to use to keep up its circulation. Some of our contemporaries cast a reflection on papers that accept a subsidy, as if it were a disgrace; what do they think of an offer of $2,000 for $1,000 worth of subscribers?

The National Advocate, the noble monthly of the Temperance Alliance in New York, is backed up by the benevolence of an immense Temperance constituency, with a live agent who travels the Republic all the time in its interests. The day has not arrived when Temperance literature, however good, can sustain itself. This is so well understood that any hint to the contrary is through sheer gnorance or a perversion of facts. The Temperance people, however, see the thing in its true light and will follow the policy that they have found to pay.—Clarion.

Johnstown Horrors.

THE HEARTRENDING TRIALS OF A MOTHER WHO TRIED TO SAVE HER CHILDREN.

A pretty, pale little woman told part of her sad story to-day as she nervously clasped and unclasped her hands and cried in a quiet, heart-breaking way. Years ago, in the Virginia valley, somewhere near Winchester, this sad little soul met and loved a hard-working, intelligent engineer, named Fenn. They were married some years ago, came to Johnstown, where they had a neat, comfortable home. Fenn made good wages, their seven children were always well clad, and their mother lived with her life concentrated upon them.

On the afternoon of the flood Fenn went to the butcher's and passed out of this short history in the waters. When the flood came into the Fenn house, the mother gathered her chicks in the parlor and told them not to be afraid, as God was there and would guard them. Up came the torrent, and they went to the second floor, and again the little mother talked of hope and bade them be of good cheer, "for papa—Heaven rest him—would come soon in a boat and take them away." Up, up and up rose the water, and now the family were forced in the top storey. The rooms were very low, and soon the heads of the mother and children were beating against the ceiling. "Mamma," said the eldest child, a girl, "wouldn't it be better to go outside and die in the open air?"

"Yes, dear," said the mother, "we'll make a raft and all go down together."

She fought her own and her children's way to the window and opened it. She caught a piece of plank and on it put the eldest child, with a hasty kiss and a "God bless you." Then she let it float away into the darkness and the roar of the waves. Six times these frail barks were freighted with precious cargoes and argosies of pious trust. The children were frightened, but obedience was part of their creed, and they made but little protest.

Now came the turn of the last child, Bessie, the four-year-old. One can fancy what it meant—the last and dearest. There was scarce breathing space in the room now, and, if haste was not used, death would come there at once. To a broad plank Bessie was fastened securely and was blessed as had been the others. "I loved them all, oh, I loved them all!" said the mother. "But I had two kisses for Bessie, for she was Tom's favorite, and was such a good child. She put her arms about my neck and said, 'You know you said God would take care of me always, mamma. Will He take care of me now?'

"I told her He would and she need not fear, and then she was carried away. 'I'm not afraid, mamma,' she called out, and I heard her, although I could not see her—and that's all, except that the roof was torn off and I floated off on it, and some Italians saved me at Kernville, sixteen miles from here."

"And the children, Mrs. Fenn, I hope they all escaped?"

"We have found two of them dead—Bessie and George—and there is not a mark on Bessie's face, and, oh, I am so tired. They're all gone, every one—eight of them—and I am going home to Virginia after all these years to rest and try to think."

THE HERO OF SOUTH FORK.

The name of the hero of South Fork is John G. Parke. He it was who first saw the danger that threatened the entire Conemaugh valley by the bursting of the dam, and took all possible precautions to prevent a catastrophe.

Early Friday morning Mr. Parke, who is a young Philadelphian and an excellent civil engineer, discovered that the fast increasing waters of the lake would either have to have an additional outlet immediately or that the dam proper would give way and swallow up the entire population of Johnstown and vicinity.

Hastily securing a force of 30 Italians he set to work to prepare another sluice. In half an hour his purpose had been accomplished, but still the waters continued to rise.

Up and up it came at the rate of six, seven, eight and ten inches an hour.

Something had to be done, and that quickly, too. Giving orders to his men to cut another outlet, Mr. Parke jumped into the saddle, and with his horse, started at a breakneck speed toward the village below.

As he rode he warned the people on every hand of their danger. Soon hundreds of families were fleeing to the hills for safety. Reaching South Fork station he telegraphed the warning to Johnstown. Two men there started out upon horseback through the city crying: "The dam; the dam is about to burst; flee for your lives."

Some heeded the note of alarm—to others it was like the wolf story—they had heard it before. To-night they either lie amid the still smoking ruins, in the fetid waters of the Conemaugh or in the crudely constructed coffins and rough boxes to be found on every hand.

His First Ride.

There are still many persons in this country who have never had a ride on a railroad car. A well-to-do farmer of Durham, on the Nashwaak, a short time ago bade an affectionate adieu to his wife and children, and after giving especial direction about the care of his horses and stock, was tenderly followed to the siding where he boarded the Northern & Western train for the town of Chatham. Those remaining behind could not restrain the flow of tears at the thought that their paternal guardian was so reckless in his old days as to risk his life on the deadly rail. As the day was fine they inwardly prayed for absence of rain until his return lest there should be a washout and the apple of their eye be consigned to eternity. John Smith we will call the adventurer, only got safely inside the door when away went the machine.

John provided himself with a brass nailed Saratoga valise, and this he held by one hand with a firm grip while with the other he steadied himself against the stove. His portly presence or his valise were in the road of everybody passing from one car to the other, but he continued to hold his position wondering at the recklessness of passengers walking while the cars were rushing through space, or at the coolness of others quietly sitting on velvet cushions, when they ought to be ready to jump in the event of accident.

At Doaktown he was assured the train would remain thirty minutes so valise in hand he stepped ashore and had his first 'sit down' for the day. Being afraid the thing might start unawares John only remained ashore fifteen minutes during which time a number of Doaktown boys vigorously questioned him as to crops, etc. down to home. During the remainder of the journey his fellow passengers became interested in John, but failed to make him drop his valise or sit down except for a moment as the train hauled into a station. In due time Chatham was reached and here the verdancy of John was manifested in undiluted form. His reception at the station was hearty, and while he told of the speed of the train, the covered cars and velvet cushions, a large crowd was soon collected.

"Will you ride down, Mister" said a coachman, but John shook his head. "Boss, let me carry your grip to the hotel" said a little boy, but John smiled and replied, I can carry it myself, thank you. Room for one more here called a hackman, but it was no use for John was cautioned not to make free with strangers. After all had left the station John said he was glad he come, for they are the darndest nicest people in Chatham he ever saw. Ever so many offered him rides, and the boys were clever, two of them offered to carry his valise but he hadn't the heart to impose on them.

John probably found a bed in one of the hotels that night and at sunrise next morning valise was hawked about the streets, and when last seen John was sitting at the door of the skating rink waiting for the agent to open up. An hour later he learned the station house was in another part of the town and that the train for Durham was half way to Doaktown. However John Smith got home next day and has never ceased relating the experience of his long journey.
