PROHIBITION SONG.

TUNE—"As the days are going by."
We will work for Prohibition,
As the days are going by;
We will send Rum to perdition,
As the days are going by;
When the Rum power we've suppressed We'll be then supremely blest—We'll be freed from our unrest—
In the coming by and by.

CHORUS.—Going by, going by; going by, going by;
We will stand up for the right
As the days are going by.

We will work though oft defeated,
As the days are going by;
Every blow as it's repeated, Will but bring the victory nigh.
Soon the last blow will be aimed,
Soon our land will be reclaimed—Every soul of man unchained—
In the coming by and by.

CHORUS.—Going by, etc.

God is with us now, we claim,
As the days are going by;
And we can not work in vain Though we work with many a sigh;
For our sighs, our prayers, our tears,
Will be felt in coming years,
When the Judge of all appears.
In the coming by and by,

CHORUS.—Going by, etc.

By the ballot we'll succeed
As the days are going by;
And our Nation will be freed
In the nearing by and by;
Bullets won in many a fight,
In the contest for the right;
By the white-winged shafts of light, We will conquer by and by.

CHORUS.—Going by, etc.

We are men of one idea,
As the days are going by;
Yes, our nation will be free
In the nearing by and by;
Better hold to one great plan,
That will benefit a man, Than to drown in a beer can,
As the days are going by.

CHORUS.—Going by, etc.

This the grand and glorious question,
As the days are going by;
Every we and want to lessen, Now—to-day—and by and by;
By the arm of One above,
By the homes and land we love, We will certain victors prove,
In the coming by and by.

CHORUS.—Going by, etc.

PRAYING AND VOTING.

There is a class of men to-day Who enter church to preach and pray; They pray: "O Lord, Thy kingdom come."
And then go out and vote for "Rum."

They say they love the temperance cause, And wish they could enact such laws As would from earth remove the curse That year by year is growing worse.

But see them on election day, These men who kneel and pray:
"Thy will be done, Thy kingdom come," Rise from their knees and vote for "Rum."

A preacher now I have in mind, Who's courteous, affable and kind—A man respected far and near,
Who votes with those who vote for "Beer."

This question I would ask of him (Seeing his eyes are growing dim): Where will those stand when Christ shall come Who always cast their votes for "Rum?"

With temperance ballot in his hand, He says: "This cause is glorious, grand."
He hopes Christ's kingdom now will come,
And then sneaks off and votes for "Rum."

Where will those saints (?) at last appear Who vote for rum, gin, ale, and beer?
Will the just Judge say to them, "Come, Ye blessed ones who favored 'Rum?'"

There's difference 'twixt a man and mule, As much as 'twixt the wise and fool;
The mind in mule remains the same,
And for his acts he has no shame.

It is not thus with human kind,
A man has sense to change his mind.
And when he's wrong, if not a fool, He'll change his mind to save his soul.

Yes, man can change, the mule he can't;
Then let us hope that God may grant Before our next elections come That preachers will not vote for "Rum."

TOO GREAT A RISK.

Come and take a glass of beer with me. We used to drink our beer together, and though you are better dressed than I am, I don't believe you have forgotten old times.

Not a bit of it, John; I have not forgotten old times or old friends, but we can never drink beer together again.

Why not, Joe?
Because I swore off from beer three years ago, and not a drop have I tasted since then.

No beer for three years! Why, you used to say you could not work without it.

I know I did, but I found out my mistake. I lost so much time I could hardly meet my family expenses. I had saved nothing and things began to look blue.

I supposed you had something laid by. As for me, I never could do any more than make the ends meet.
I think, every year, I will insure my life for the benefit of my wife and children, but I never could get money enough ahead to do it.

I have insured my life, and it was in trying to do that I learned a lesson about beer.

How? I don't understand.

I will explain. I had worked three months without losing a day, when I made application for an insurance on my life at the office of a large Western company. The first question asked me was: Do you drink beer? Of course I told him the truth, and answered that I did. Then we cannot insure you, said the agent.
Why not? I asked in astonishment.
It is a rule recently adopted, he replied. We cannot afford to insure beer-drinkers. It is taking too great a risk.

That was enough for me. I went out of that office lively, and when I got home I thought the matter over.
I had heard a good deal said against beer, and I knew the out-and-out temperance people count it almost as bad as whiskey, but I believed that beer was good.

I studied on it, and at last I tried going without for a month. It was a tough job, but I went through with it, and after the first week my appetite improved. I had less ache in my head and more change in my pocket. I tried it another month, and that settled the question for me.
In six months I insured my life in the same company that had refused me before.

Seems to me I would have gone to some other company. I wouldn't have given them a chance to refuse me a second time.

I was pretty sure of not being refused the second time, and they had done me so good a turn I wanted to patronize them. They didn't refuse me the first time without good reason. They are doing business on business principles, and they have come to the conclusion that beer-drinkers are not desirable patrons.
A beer-drinker is likely to die too soon to make it profitable to insure his life.

But beer is a healthy drink. If not, why do physicians prescribe it?
The first glass I ever drank was prescribed by a physician.

He did not prescribe it for your lifetime.

No; but you know how it is.
When you get in the habit of using it, there don't seem to be anything else to take its place. Anyway, it has been so with me, and I shouldn't know how to get through a day's work without it.

It costs you more that you can afford to pay.

I know it costs something, but it is my only extravagance.

Your only extravagance is an expensive one. Go without beer for a month, and give your wife the money you are in the habit of paying for your drinks, and see how much comfort she will get out of it. I used to think she was a good manager.

She is a wonderful manager. If she wasn't, we never could make the ends meet.

Does she drink beer?

Not a drop. She hates it, and thinks it is thoroughly bad. She says she can always tell when I have drunk more than usual.

Of course she can; I know all about that. Your head aches; you don't want to hear a word from your children, and you don't feel like saying anything pleasant to your wife.

That is about the way of it.
And, John, if the truth was told in plain words, you are so cross and sunny your children are glad to keep away from you, and your wife is likely to think of the time when she was a girl in her father's house. I don't wonder she hates beer. The only wonder to me is that she don't hate the beer-drinker. She deserves the best you can give her.

That is true and it is time I thought more about it. If it is beer that keeps me poor and cross, the beer must go. I have thought myself a pretty good fellow because I never drink anything stronger.

That is the way with a great many, but beer is evil, and that continually.
It is sapping the Nation's strength, and taking bread from the mouths of starving women and children.

That sounds bad, Joe, though I know of men who drink so much they cannot have a great deal of money to spend on their families. I wonder if the worst that is said about beer-drinking is really true.

I don't believe anything so bad as the truth can be said. The more I think and study about it, the more ready I am to denounce beer as the curse of workingmen. The man who drinks it is taking a fearful risk, such as neither you nor I can afford to take.—National Temperance Advocate.

License vs. No License.

To any reasonable or candid mind there need be no argument on this question. Why not license the merchant in dry goods or any other line of merchandise just as well. The reason is very plain, viz: because these are legitimate branches of trade.
But this fiendish black-hearted child of the devil requires restrictions by a license system. It is a fact that every impartial, candid man and woman—when met with facts on this issue—admit that the whole business (if business you call it) is wrong, not a little wrong, but a giant "whose feet run swift to destruction." To the class of persons who say that one class of people have no right to say to another class that they shall not drink, we say that when it affects the public peace they have an absolute right to say that such a nuisance shall be abated.

We say that the whiskey and beer traffic are the illegitimate children of the devil and must be chained by the good people of our noble old province. I think that the licensing of the drink curse is a high crime and all impartial, honest men and woman think the same. I think the man who sells it is in partnership with thieves robbers and pirates. Shall we give up the battle and let the thirst for gold drag our sons and brothers down to destruction and death? Never, no never. Rally ye philanthropists to the ballot box and let us put a plank of prohibition in the constitution of every province in our beloved country. It was always so that the prudent and wise have had to care for the imprudent and unwise, and we presume always will be. Then I say to every lover of peace and prosperity, of mother, wife, children, humanity and home, all rally! form in phalanx strong and let us face the foe and never rest until the desired end of virtue, sobriety and prohibition is attained. This is the morn. Never was the public mind so ripe for it as now.

You Did It.

Little Bessie was dying.
Her father had struck the child a blow on the spine while insane from the influence of rum, and confusion and terror overwhelm the frantic household, for little Bessie is beloved by all.

Among those of the neighbors who had gathered in amid the excitement was the rum-seller who had dealt out the poison to that neighborhood for years. He drew near the death-bed, and heard a watcher, who was wiping the death-damp from the child's beautiful face, "That blow has killed her." Little Bessie caught the whisper, and raising her eyes that were growing large in death, she fixed a dying gaze upon the rum-seller and said, "You did it!" and in a few minutes was dead.

That group never forgot the dying child's charge, and the rum-seller says that it haunts him day and night; and yet he continues to deal out the fatal beverage to his victims. Every one of us who does not rise up and assist in crushing this brazen serpent is guilty before God, and the rum-seller will say of us, "They who are not against us are for us;" and more than one "Little Bessie" will say to us,
"You did it!"
Yes! the wholesale murder of innocents will not cease until this traffic ceases, and to-day millions of voices are crying to us from the grave, "You did it!"
